I have called the attention of the House to the preceding provisions of the Esch and the Senate bills to emphasize the apparent difference between each of these bills and the substitute bill of the majority, now under consideration, on the vital and controlling points in legislation of this kind—the certainty of the hours on and off duty, and the quick, certain, and efficient mode of enforcing and collecting penalties. If the majority desired wholesome and remedial legislation, so earnestly demanded and necessary for the protection of the traveling public, either one of these bills could have been adopted. The La Follette bill passed the Senate on January 10, 1907, and on the 11th was referred to our committee. We can draw but one inference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will present in contrast the substitute bill touching the limitation of the sixteen hours, and I challenge anyone on this floor to interpret its meaning:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or knowingly permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever any such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty; and no such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period shall be required or permitted to continue on duty, or go on duty, without having had at least eight hours off duty within such twenty-four-hour period; unless immediately prior to said twenty-four-hour period such employee had at least eight consecutive hours off duty and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty.

Can anyone on the floor of this House give that sentence a satisfactory construction? He can not do it. Why did they not take the La Follette bill, that makes it a plain sixteen hours, or the Esch bill? "No; but this contains words of evasion and doubt, and no "Philadelphia lawyer," as the saying is, can lucidly construe that paragraph in this bill.

lucidly construe that paragraph in this bill.

The House will note that the significant and undeterminable word "knowingly" is deftly inserted in the foregoing section of the substitute of the majority. This word does not occur either in the La Follette or Esch bills. I am aware that the argument is vigorously made that a man can not commit a crime unless he has the "intent." Does that properly apply to a statute of this kind, where the legislative intent is to punish a corporation of artificial existence for the protection of the lives of the people who travel on railroads? The common carriers keep the books, have supervision of all the working crews going in and out, know when the engineer and his crew have finished their run, and when they are to start out again. Ought not the party having this unquestioned control assume its responsibility—bear the burden of presumption imposed by law under such conditions?

Doubtless the majority of the committee feared the criticism that would be hurled at this word "knowingly," and they inserted in section 3 of their bill this remarkable language:

In all prosecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all acts of its duly authorized agents.

I pause to ask, Mr. Speaker, who are the "duly authorized agents" of the common carrier? The burden of proof in the court would be on the Government to show affirmatively that the agent of the common carrier was specifically authorized to act at that time and in that case. It might be a divisible duty performed by more than one agent. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, the word "knowingly" being in this bill practically makes it impossible for the Government to convict. It is an obstacle in the path of the prompt and efficient enforcement of the provisions of the law. What is the mode prescribed for the recovery of penalties for the violation of the law? Section 3 of the substitute bill, line 13, page 5, reads:

And it shall be the duty of such district attorney, under direction of the Attorney-General, to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him; but no such suit shall be brought after the expiration of three years from the date of such violation; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

For what reason, in the nature of justice, should all this circumlocution be injected into this proposed remedial relief? It only means a stumbling block—an impediment. It does not mean to facilitate proceedings arising in such cases. Oh, no; not that. It is not intended to promote or secure justice or its prompt administration. These worthy ends are not sought after. Why not leave the matter of the suits in the hands of the district attorney? Let him file the suits as is done in other matters.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, Yes; certainly, to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If an employee was engaged for fifteen hours consecutively and they lay him off for two hours, then they could put him back again?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Why, yes. The fact of the matter is that this bill, instead of providing a remedy for this evil against the employment or working of men on railroads more than sixteen hours, legalizes the violation of the law. It is, Mr. Speaker, a travesty on the relief sought. I ask any gentleman here what the construction is of this paragraph that I have read from the bill. Why, as I said, a Philadelphia lawyer could not work it out. Why not take the plain provision of the La Follette bill?

Mr. SULZER. Was it not the object of the gentleman who put this clause into the bill to kill the bill? Mr. SULZER.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, I am not going to say anything about the purpose of any member of my committee; that would be an attempt to judge of my colleagues' motives. I can not do. But I have a right to comment upon what I find Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would have been wise to take the Esch bill, which was reported unanimously last May by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by both Republicans and Democrats, and which provided a simple, plain remedy, or the La Follette Senate bill. As the law applies throughout the country of the United States the district attorneys could have the complaints filed before them and they could act. What does this bill do? Why, it goes on all around the circle, goes to the Interstate Commerce Commission and then the Attorney-General and then finally comes back into the hands of the district attorney, and after all these different parties have given advice the district attorney can act. What kind of a remedy is that?

Let us read just one moment from the Esch bill:

For each and every violation to be recovered in a suit or suits brought by the United States district attorney.

Now, that is the Esch bill. There is no Interstate Commerce Commission about that. No waiting on the Attorney-General about an humble employee being worked overtime. What available remedy is provided for the enforcement of the penalties in this bill to a plain, ordinary citizen, way down in South Carolina or in Alabama, if he has to send his case up to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to the Attorney-General of the United States. Why not let him go as we do in the Internal-Revenue Service or in various other laws throughout the country, go to the United States district attorney, and leave it in his hands to say whether a suit shall be prosecuted or not? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Will the gentleman yield some of his time? Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining? The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. ESCH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wanger].

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, we are all so familiar with the startling catastrophes of the country, and which seem to have been multiplied recently, that the need for effective protection of the public and of railway employees ought to be apparent to everybody. Some of these catastrophes occur from the too long employment of trainmen without opportunities for rest, but it is only a fraction of the entire number of that kind. However, that fraction involves so much of human life and of safety to limb that it ought to be corrected if it is possible through legislation, and there is not an instance of a catastrophe that has been cited to the committee having the measure in charge or otherwise, so far as I am aware, but what the excessive employment of the trainmen would not have been permitted under the provisions of the amendment which a majority of the committee offer, and I am very glad that the proposition before the House provides for a modification of the practice which prevails on some of the railways of employing telegraph and other operators who have to do wifh train movements from continuing them for longer than an eight-hour period. Of course the provision says nine hours, in order that there may not be any tie up between the change of employees and that the man going on may ascertain the condition of affairs from the man going off, but the provision really compels a three shift during the twenty-four hours instead of simply a double shift, which means twelve hours of employment; and the additional hour permitted is nothing more than a reasonable provision to secure a safe and certain execution of law and performance of duties by operators. Now, complaint is made about the insertion of the word "knowingly" in the act. What objection can there possibly be to it when we remember that many cases of catastrophes from a too long employment of the operative that that operative is on duty for such a long period because he has taken another man's turn? It certainly would not be just to punish a railroad company if a substitution of employees was made without the knowledge of the superintendent or other official supervising the operations of that particular part or section of the road.

In the interesting and ably conducted journal entitled "Charities and the Commons," for February 2, 1907, in an article entitled "The Death Roll of Industry," it is stated:

titled "The Death Roll of Industry," it is stated:

In none of the other great groups of industry in the United States are equally complete and accurate statistics of accidents to employees gathered as in the first group, the railways. When the Interstate Commerce Commission made its first report, in 1889, it found that of the 704,743 railroad employees 1,972 were killed and 20,028 were injured, a total of 22,000 for the year. During the latest year for which statistics are complete, 1905, of the 1,382,196 railroad employees 3,361 were killed and 66,833 injured, a total of 70,194. In other words, though our railroads do not employ twice the number of men they did in 1889, they kill or injure nearly three times as many.

Where one railroad man in 35,2 was killed or injured in 1889, now one in 19.7 is killed or injured. This startling change has been brought about by a more rapid increase in the number of injuries than in the number of deaths. One in every 414 railroad men lost his life in 1905, against one in every 367 in 1889 and one in every 486 in 1897.

Railroading itself is nearly twice as dangerous as it was eighteen years ago and traveling on the railroad is more than twice as dangerous. The comparatively small number of accidents to passengers should not distract attention from the comparatively large number of accidents to employees, nor the comparatively smaller increase in fatalities from the large increase in injuries. It is no wonder that railroad employees have declared that "when soldering is as deadly as switching, international disarmament will be at hand." It is not only switching that is dangerous—the chance of a railway mail clerk of coming through the year safely is 21 to 1. The engineer takes 1 chance in 9 that he will be injured before the year is over, and 1 in 120 that he will be killed. The men working in the yards, the conductors and brakemen, the porter who makes the berth, the boy who sells the magazines and newspapers, the man who handles the baggage, even the man at the crossing wh

Among the vast number of railway employees fidelity to duty is the rule, and yet the exceptions are sufficiently numerous to suggest the need of more strict discipline and self-preservation no less than fidelity to employer and the public will prompt vigilant railway employees to insist that their fellows having no more than reasonable hours of duty during each period shall be equally vigilant and faithful.

Great progress has been made in the adoption of devices to save life and limb, but nearly all of these contrivances depend for their efficiency upon the alertness and accuracy of the men controlling their operation. In the article mentioned, Mr. J. J. Hill is quoted as recently saying:

Every time I undertake a railroad journey nowadays I wonder whether it is to be my last. The thing has grown to be uncertain. It is a fact of knowledge to every railroad man that in this day from two to three trains enter at times into every block of every system in the country. There is danger in it.

The tables of prominent train accidents presented in the quarterly bulletins of accidents, issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, show a considerable percentage of collisions re-sulting from plain neglect of duty by railway employees, only a part of whom had been on duty for more than a reasonable number of hours. But that fraction is sufficiently large that it ought to be eliminated and work beyond the period of human effectiveness not be permitted even by agreement between the railway official and the employee; and the amendment reported by the majority is much better calculated to secure the desired result than the bill as passed by the Senate.

The proposed amendment in its first section conforms to the language of the interstate-commerce act, and is certain in its intent and relieves the prosecution of the difficulty of proving that the train on which the employee is engaged was carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers, the burden of which is involved in the Senate bill.

It also clearly limits the maximum of permissible employment to sixteen consecutive hours, and also as clearly requires that after sixteen consecutive hours on duty there must be at least ten consecutive hours off duty; whereas the Senate bill does not declare when the ten hours off duty may be essential. The amendment also requires that where stations are continuously operated night and day no operator, train dispatcher, or other employee who by the use of the telegraph or telephone dispatches reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than nine consecutive hours in any twenty-four hour period.

The latter provision is probably the most material in the measure. Statistics of the number of railway companies that only have two shifts of operatives during twenty-four hours of duty are not available, but on at least a considerable number of lines having the heaviest traffic this is the rule. A very considerable percentage of train accidents result from the errors of operators giving or transmitting train orders, and while such errors can not be entirely eliminated they may be greatly reduced if the operator is only permitted to be on duty during the number of hours that he can most effectively labor. A sufficient number of competent operators can not probably be immediately secured, but as the bill is not to go into effect until a year after its passage abundant time is afforded to provide for the change.

The postponement of the operation of the bill for a year is not an unreasonable provision, as the sixteen-hour limitation will require great changes on some of the railway systems, including the building of roundhouses at new points and other constructions, reasonably requiring that length of time constructions, reasonably requiring that length of time.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Driscoll] inquired whether the brotherhoods of railway employees favored the Senate bill or the committee amendment. The brotherhoods have not had pointed out to them as yet the just criticism to the Senate bill, nor have they had any opportunity to consider the committee amendment. Their membership in the main is just, reasonable, and intelligent; and when the provisions of the two propositions are fully considered by them there can be no question of their final approval of the amendment. The Brotherhood of Railway Telegraphers is entitled to consideration, and its wishes are wholly ignored in the provisions of the Senate bill.

Experience alone can demonstrate the legal provisions which will effectively safeguard the lives and limbs of railway employees and the traveling public. The committee amendment seems to best meet the probable needs of the situation without paralysis to railway operation, and we feel is a long step in the right direction and the safest step that can be taken at present.

Railway managers are animated by the same humane impulses that dominate other mortals, and the interests of the companies they control prompt them to seek to avoid losses. And, like other human beings, they are sometimes slow in adopting new methods and shrink from the incurrence of radical changes of system because of expense or of partiality for methods they have long used. An occasional prod therefore becomes advisable and seems to be appropriate at this time for some of them, and calls for this legislation. It is proper that their attention should be called to the instances where inefficient persons have been placed in charge of stations to receive and transmit orders for train movements. Youths should be very alert, but they should be thoroughly instructed in the duties to be performed and not be permitted to sleep at their posts or otherwise fail in efficiency and bring to premature death or disability the employees and passengers upon trains which are brought into collision by their neglect or ignorance.

During the delivery of Mr. Wanger's remarks the following occurred:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WANGER. I present the foregoing tables as indicating the general character of the reports of accidents received by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and their various causes.

In a letter to me from the able and experienced secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Edward A. Moseley, he says:

The necessity for limiting the hours for telegraph operators and others having to do with the receipt and transmission of train orders is apparent. We are unable to give complete information as to the number of hours worked by telegraph operators, for the reason that the reports furnished by the railroad companies do not in all cases specify the hours of labor with respect to telegraph operators.

Mr. Moseley has furnished me with the following summary:

Cases reported in accident bulletins of the Interstate Commerce Commission showing collisions due to mistakes of telegraph operators.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the importance of this legislation is not only evidenced by the demand of the men engaged in operating the trains of the interstate railroads, it is demanded by the people from all sections of the country; and we are to-day called upon not to enact by this substitute efficient legislation that will prevent the continuance of overworking the men engaged in carrying the life and property of the people over the great interstate-commerce roads of this country, but we are simply asked to vote under suspension of the rules for a substitute which annihilates and destroys all legislation proper for the purpose of carrying out the demands of both the railroad employees and the people.

Before I say anything further on that line, I desire to respond to the inquiry made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Driscoll] as to the authority of the gentleman who signed the letter which has been read to speak for the railroad trainmen. I hold in my hand a certificate signed by the grand chief of the engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the grand master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the grand chief conductor of the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, and the grand master of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, which is as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, November 21, 1906.

To schom these presents may concern, greeting:

This is to certify that the bearer hereof, Mr. H. R. Fuller, whose signature appears below, has been duly chosen to serve as the representative of the above-named organizations at Washington, D. C., during the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress in matters pertaining to national legislation.

W. S. STONE,
Grand Chief Engineer B. of L. E.
JOHN J. HANNAHAN,
Grand Master B. of L. F.
A. B. GARRETSON,
Grand Chief Conductor O. of R. C.
O. H. MORRISSEY,
Grand Master B. of R. T.

H. R. FULLER, Representative.

This letter authorizes Mr. Fuller to speak for them upon this and all other matters that may come before Congress. Mr. Speaker, not only is the country realizing the importance, but its attention has been riveted upon this subject during the past year, and especially during the past few months, by the awful tragedies which have been enacted upon railroads. I hold in my hand an account of a recent accident that occurred within gunshot of this Capitol, and it undertakes to show, and does demonstrate, that terrible catastrophe and loss of life was occasioned by the overworking of the engineer of the train and the overworking of the telegraph operator. That account is as follows, and is taken from the last issue of Ridgeways:

follows, and is taken from the last issue of Ridgeways:

Why should the railroad companies—public servants and carriers, recipients of countless privileges and advantages—why should they scrimp and pinch expenditures to the needless peril of their customers lives? Because they must get the money to pay the interest on these fictitious stocks and baseless bonds with which the captains of industry play the games of high finance.

At this Takoma Park station, near Washington, the scrimping, pinching railroad company had one operator working twelve hours a day. When he left his post at night, it was the rule for him to set his signals indicating the block was occupied and leave them so all night. Train after train passed every night and found nothing in the block. Of course the signals speedly came to mean nothing. One night there was a train stalled in the block, and the following train plunged through it and ground thirty persons to death. The railroad company would not employ a night operator for that signal station because a night operator would cost a few dollars a month, and incessantly it must save every possible cent to pay the interest on its watered stock, provide its gambling chips, and maintain its place before the croupler at the table of Wall street.

OVERWORKED ENGINE DRIVERS.

OVERWORKED ENGINE DRIVERS.

OVERWORKED ENGINE DRIVERS.

The engineer in the Takoma accident had been on duty two days, with a total of six or seven hours' rest. On all European railroads no man is allowed to work more than thirteen hours, and before he can go to work again ten hours must have intervened. In a recent accident in Connecticut an engineer that had been on duty sixteen hours was kept waiting at the roundhouse two hours more and then sent out on a four-hour run. When, dazed with weariness and lack of sleep, he missed a signal and hit a train, he was held responsible for the accident. He was only an engineer, therefore he could bear the trouble and the penalty of the disaster. The coroner's jury would probably have been greatly shocked at a suggestion that it should indict the directors re sponsible for such overwork.

In the first nineteen days of January of this year there occ

In the first nineteen days of January of this year there oc-curred on the railroads of the United States of America 16 wrecks in which 136 people were killed and more than that number were injured.

In the investigation of the accident that occurred at Terra Cotta, near Washington, it appeared that one of the telegraph operators concerned had been working twelve hours a day, and the engineer in charge of the train had been on duty for two days, with only six or seven hours of rest.

This is but a sample of the accidents that have happened, with the accompanying sacrifice of human lives, in the effort of the railroads to save money by overworking their employees. It is to protect the employees and the public that we believe some efficient legislation ought to be enacted, and it can not be done if the substitute reported now and sought to be passed is enacted into law.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, in a bulletin issued by it and known as "Accident Bulletin, No. 21—for July, Au-gust, and September, 1906," gives the following information on page 13:

SPECIAL INFORMATION CONTAINED IN PRECEDING BULLETIN.

Each accident bulletin contains tables showing the number of passengers and employees killed and injured, and these figures are classified according to cause (see Table No. 1); also tables showing cost of the different classes of train accidents. The causes of accidents to employees in coupling and uncoupling and in falling from cars, etc., are further classified in Tables No. 3 and No. 4. The most serious collisions and deraliments are dealt with in a supplementary table (Class A) showing the causes in some detail. Each builetin is for three months, and No. 1 was for the quarter ending September 30, 1901. The bulletin for the quarter ending June 30 contains, in addition to the quarterly statistics, tables showing the same information for the whole of the fiscal year ending on that date.

Bulletin No. 17 records one collision, killing 6 and injuring 35 persons, and one deraliment, killing 15 and injuring 28. The collision, occurring at 1 a. m., was due to gross negligence on the part of the men in charge of a freight train. The derailment was due to an open draw. The drawbridge was not provided with interlocked signals, and the engineman was not adequately acquainted with the line of the road. A collision and a derailment are reported which were due to the lack of suitable detector bars at switches and a collision which was due to failure of "controlled manual" block signal working.

Bulletin No. 18 shows total casualties much larger than in the preceding quarters, due largely no doubt to an enormous increase in traffic. Many accidents are reported in which the men had been on duty excessively long hours. One cellision, killing 17 persons, was due to the error of an engineman of five months' experience, who ran past five warning signals. Another collision, killing 10 persons, was due to the failure of the men in charge of a freight train to identify opposing passenger trains. One derailment of a passenger train, killing 13 persons, was reported as due to some cause that could not be discovered.

Bulletin No. 19

The provision which directs suits for the recovery of the penalty to be brought by the district attorneys "under the direction of the Attorney-General" would mean but this: That no suits could be brought for the recovery of the penalty except a showing was made that it was brought by the direction of the Attorney-General. The fact that the district attorneys are under he Department of Justice, and generally under the direction of the Attorney-General, does not mean that the district attorneys in order to prosecute must have the order or direction of Attorney-General before suits generally can be brought. If we leave in this bill the words "under the direction of the Attorney-General," then, in every suit brought for the recovery of this penalty, being in the nature of a criminal proceeding, it must appear, both in the accusation and in the proof, that the Attorney-General directed the bringing of such suit, and this must appear in order to give the court jurisdiction. This was decided by the Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Theckmorton (98 U. S., pp. 70-71): That case was a suit to set aside a patent for land, and the court upon this point held as follows:

as follows:

There arises no presumption from the act of Congress which gives the Department of Justice general supervision over the district attorneys that this suit was brought by his direction, for they—that is, the district attorneys—in the strict line of their duty bring innumerable suits, indictments, and prosecutions in which the United States is plaintiff without consulting him. It is essential, therefore, in such a suit that, without special regard to form, but in some way which the court may recognize, it should appear that the Attorney-General has brought the suit himself or gave such order for its institution.

This principle is affirmed in the following cases: 108 United States, 510; 118 United States, 271.

So that if these words are left in this bill, in order for the district attorneys at any time to bring suit to recover the penalty.

district attorney at any time to bring suit to recover the penalty here prescribed the Attorney-General would have to give specific instructions, and such specific instructions would have appear both in the pleadings and the proof. Whereas, if we leave these words out the district attorneys will be left free to prosecute the violations of these laws, just as they now prosecute all other violations of the laws. This provision will but hamper and embarrass the officers of the law in enforcing it. I will not say such is the purpose and intent of those who insist upon it, but I do say its incorporation into the bill will render prosecutions under it difficult.

We on this side are all ready to respond to the demands made by the workmen engaged upon the railroads, to the demands made by the people, by the citizens, and by the traveling public, but we are not willing to respond to that demand and say that the railroads shall only pay the paltry penalty of not exceeding $500, and that recovered by a suit, but not until the Attorney-General directs. We are ready to vote for a bill which will make it a crime punishable by imprisonment and fine upon the railroad and its officers when they shall violate that law, and not simply that they shall violate it and pay money for violat-

If I could amend this bill I would make it a criminal offense for the railroad to overwork its employees. These employees are the men in whose keeping the lives of the traveling public are placed, and it is the duty of this Congress to see to it that they are not permitted to be forced to work exhaustively long hours, but should protect them and especially the public from the greed of these railroad corporations, who demand of their employees that they shall work more than human nature can endure.

Humanity, the safety of the employees, the safety and the lives of the public call upon us to enact a law which protects

Mr. Speaker, in ancient times it was said that he was justly considered a skillful poisoner who destroyed his victims by bouquets of lovely and fragrant flowers. The art has not been lost; nay, it is practiced every day by the world, and there is no better evidence of the existence of the art than we see here to-day in the effort of the majority to force this substitute by the suspension of the rules, and thus polson "unto death" all legitimate and efficient effort at legislation on this subject. I sincerely trust that all friends of the traveling public and the railroad employees and who favor proper legislation on this subject will vote down this motion, and let us have an opportunity to consider the bill and amend it, so we can have real and efficient legislation and not this sham substitute. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wanger] just now made an objection on account of language which I have considered and conferred with my associates about. It was, at least, invested with some doubt whether improper or not, and I have no desire to put those words in the speech.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the objection.
Mr. ADAMSON: Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I

All I want to shall need the time which has been allotted me. say is that I am in absolute and hearty accord with the minority members of the committee who see in this bill nothing but a sham, a delusion, and a pretense. It is in my opinion a humbug, intended to humbug—a blind intended solely to hoodwink people with the pretense of attempting to consummate the avowed and ostensible purposes of the title of the bill, while it puts it within the power of the railroad to avoid and evade the entire law. I believe that the passage of this bill will have the effect of preventing the passage of real and effective legislation, calculated and intended to accomplish the desired result; and that this proposed bill is neither calculated nor intended, nor will it have the effect of, accomplishing the desired result. That desired result is at one and the same time in the interest of labor engaged upon interstate railroads and in the interest of safety to passengers and to crews. With the view of bringing about that condition of safety to the traveling public and justice to the labor operating the train, it was thought necessary, and, in my opinion, is necessary, that legislation should be had to keep men from working such long hours that they are mentally and physically incapable of doing their work right. Senator LA FOLLETTE did a good work. The House committee by this substitute has marred his work. I believe that two-thirds of the accidents which the country has heard so much of here lately are due to the overwork of the men operating the trains and to the overwork of the telegraphers. And, by the way, the telegraphers are not included, as I understand it, even ostensibly, in the proposed substitute.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is in the substitute, but excepted away.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it is in it "in a way," as t gentleman from Georgia says, but is excepted out of it in real substance. I believe the very accident by which the president of the Southern Railway came to his untimely and lamented death was the result of the manner in which the Southern Railway had been operated under his superintendency. I believe men have been worked unreasonable hours, in some cases twenty-three hours on a stretch, and even twenty-four; that they go asleep at their post, and are mentally and physically incapable of effectively doing their work.

Let us defeat the motion to suspend the rules for the passage of this bill, a means of bringing it up resorted to in order to prevent the consideration by the House of amendments to make That will not defeat legislation on the subject. It will merely necessitate its being brought up again in a way that will enable us to amend it and make of it a bill really in the interest of labor and of the traveling public. Both will understand our purpose and applaud its ultimate result. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, every Member who has speken during this debate has emphasized the importance of this legislation. Everyone favors the enactment of some law prohibiting the employment of railway employees more than sixteen consecutive hours and then compelling adequate rest before reemployment. The majority of your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are strongly in favor of such legislation which shall be effective, practical, and work no unnecessary hardships upon the public, the employees, or the railroad companies.

It is a new subject of legislation, vitally affects the welfare and movements of employees, and will necessarily produce many changes in the management of the carriers.

The details of such a measure are varied and important and have been considered by your committee during many sessions. We have desired, first of all, to adequately care for the welfare of the employees, to guard their safety and health, and for that purpose to make the provisions of the act effective, clear, and practicable to be enforced.

Next we were obliged to consider the welfare of the public, its safety while traveling, and then how far the facilities for the transactions of its business would be affected by the pro-visions of the law. Lastly, it is necessary to consider the condi-tions as to the railways, how far they would be affected by requiring the rearrangement of their divisions and terminals and general business, and how far their service to the public would be affected as to furnishing adequate facilities at the lowest possible rates.

EFFECTS OF THE LAW.

Everyone realizes that too liberal a law would not protect the men as much as they ought to be protected, while too stringent a law would greatly impede the movement of traffic, would tend to diminish facilities of transportation, even now insufficient and inadequate, and that would injure the general business and the general prosperity of the country. such stringent provisions would not insure safety to the public, because necessarily quite a large number of green, inexperienced men must be for some time used in train service; and the mistakes of inefficient men are quite as dangerous to the public as fatigue of the experienced men.

The House will realize, Mr. Speaker, that the problem was a most difficult one—first of all, to properly protect the men, not injure the public by too stringent provisions, and not cast a greater burden upon the railroads than is fairly necessary. Among eighteen members of a great committee there are many differences of opinion as to methods and details, and, so far as I have seen, there has been no difference of opinion that all of us desire a proper measure.

NO BILL ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY.

I doubt if any member of the committee is fully satisfied with the report and bill he voted to support upon this floor.

I have too great respect for the intelligence and intellectual integrity of my colleagues of the minority of the committee to believe that they desire the enactment of the bill as it came to our committee, as they know, as well as I do, that it can not possibly accomplish the results expected by either the employees or the public. The people have a right to expect from us a measure which shall produce certain results and remedy certain admitted evils. We of the majority of your committee are positive that it can be demonstrated that such results and such relief can not possibly be afforded by the Senate bill, so we have substituted one which we are positive is far better, is calculated to effect some of the desirable things expected by the people and remedy some of the wrongs which need to be redressed.

OBJECTIONS OF MINORITY.

The members of the minority who have spoken upon this floor have vigorously denounced our substitute, but they have not analyzed it; they have not compared it with the Senate bill, so the House has had no opportunity to fairly judge of the comparative merits of the two measures. We of the majority do not claim perfection for our substitute. We all admit it is capable of improvement, and if each man on the committee had his own way, undoubtedly he thinks he could improve it.

But none of us can entirely have his own way, and perhaps It is fortunate this is so. We had to compromise and agree upon a measure that is fully satisfactory to nobody. We admit it can be improved, and for this very reason the motion was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch] that the House do suspend the rules, pass the substitute bill, and ask the Senate for a conference to perfect the measure.

This is the only way any bill can be improved before it is enacted into law. It is of no value to this House or to the employee or to the people to denounce and abuse and apply epithets to either bill. What is desired and needed by all fairminded men is a careful analysis of both bills and a correct explanation of the results which could be reasonably expected if either were enacted into law.

ANALYSIS OF BILLS.

So I will analyze the provisions of both measures, place their provisions as to the same subject-matter side by side, so that any person of ordinary intelligence can judge for himself as to the comparative merits of the two bills, the House substitute as favored by the majority of the committee on one side or the Senate bill as favored by the minority of the committee on the other.

First, as to the carriers to which the act can apply:

It will be noted that the provisions of the House bill are as general as possible and cover every possible railroad where an employee may be under the control of Congress. The language of the House bill is practically the same as contained in the interstate commerce act and the arbitration act of 1898 as to interstate carriers, while the Senate bill describes three classes of carriers to be embraced within the act:

Railroad in Territory of the United States.

3. Railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

This section does not necessarily include railroads running from Territories to States or from one Territory to another or from the District of Columbia to the States, unless such may be included in the third class, that such railroad is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. It is probable that all railroads so do and that all could come within such a provision, but it must be a matter of proof on the part of the prosecution in every such case, which is not necessary under the House bill. A little carelessness on the part of the prosecuting officer under the Senate bill could easily defeat a successful prosecution, not possible under the House bill.

Following are the provisions of the two bills relating to the prohibitions as to improper working hours.

IN SENATE BILL.

First. It shall be unlawful for any railroad * * * to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours.

IN HOUSE BILL

IN HOUSE BILL.

First, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or knowingly permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever any such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty.

Second, And no such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period to continue on duty or to go on duty without having had at least eight hours off duty within such twenty-four-hour period.

Third. Or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period shall be required or permitted to continue on duty, or go on duty, without having had at least eight hours off duty within such twenty-four-hour period.

Third Unless

riod.

Third. Unless immediately prior to said twenty-four-hour period such employee had at least eight consecutive hours off duty and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty.

The differences between the provisions of the two acts are substantially that as to the first subdivision there is an absolute prohibition of more than sixteen consecutive hours' work, with certain exceptions to be hereafter discussed. The House provision makes clear that more than sixteen consecutive hours' work must be followed by at least ten consecutive hours of rest. No such requirement is made in the Senate bill. The third pro-hibition in the Senate bill may have been intended to modify the first prohibition against more than sixteen consecutive hours of work, which must then be immediately followed by at least ten consecutive hours of rest. It is evident to anybody that the Senate provision does not so do. The language of the Senate provision, "without having had at least ten hours off duty," does not provide for ten continuous or consecutive hours, nor does it provide such rest should immediately follow in whole or in part the sixteen consecutive hours of work. The words "without having had" allow that part of the rest may have been already had and part may follow the period of work. It would be a perfect defense to any common carrier to show that the employee had at least ten hours off duty just before the sixteen-hour period and just after. It is not required to be continuous or following, and so practically nullifies the very purpose of the act. Such language, if enacted into law, would prevent any convictions for the violations of the two clauses above referred to. Paragraph 2 of the Senate bill and paragraph 2 of the House bill are substantially the same. House provision was taken from the Senate bill.

The third provision of the House bill, as follows

Unless immediately prior to said period of twenty-four hours, he had at least eight consecutive hours off duty, and during the following period of twenty-four, at least six consecutive hours off duty was inserted to prevent undue hardships and difficulties in the operation of the law.

The result of all the provisions of section 2 as amended would be that in all cases where the employee is on duty for sixteen consecutive hours there must follow at least ten consecutive hours of rest; that in every twenty-four-hour period there must be at least eight hours' rest in the aggregate, except in the case where the employee has had a rest of at least eight consecutive hours there may follow work for any time less than sixteen hours, which must be followed by a rest of at least six consecutive hours; but during the next day there must be at least eight hours' rest. The general effect of the act will require at least ten hours' rest after sixteen consecutive hours of work and a minimum of eight hours' rest for every day, except that on alternate days after at least eight hours' rest above described there may be a minimum of six consecutive hours during such day, but this must be followed during the next day of either eight or ten consecutive hours of rest.

This will enable some runs to be made with a shorter stop at the division terminal and a quicker return home of the train crews without impairing the strength of the men or their effi-ciency for good service. This provision is intended to cover a class of cases where a train crew has had ample opportunity of rest of eight or ten hours at home and then starts on a trip requiring less than sixteen hours; for example, fifteen and one-half hours. Now, under this provision such train crew must lay off for six consecutive hours at the terminal away from home and then return home by a continuous trip of not exceeding sixteen hours. When the employee reaches home, the act would require him to rest at least eight hours again before starting on another

It is not designed to cause hardship but to prevent hardships to the men being detained at uncomfortable and disagreeable places away from home. It provides that they may have this opportunity to get home two hours quicker after requiring at least six hours' rest between the two periods of employment. This provision was inserted to benefit the men. No railroad company asked for it or desired it, and if the men do not want this privilege such provision can be easily eliminated in conference. It is objected that this provision would allow the men to be worked thirty-four hours out of forty-eight, but the Senate bill allows work for thirty-two hours out of forty-eight, a difference of only two hours out of two days, so distributed and allotted as to help the men to get home quicker, save them expense, time, and discomfort, and at the Second. Or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty same time require reasonable amount of rest at every period

This is a new proposition, submitted in good faith, and should be discussed in that spirit. That is what a conference is for, and this may be one of the provisions to be seriously considered at such a meeting.

Following are the exceptions in the two bills authorizing the extension of the sixteen consecutive hours of duty in exceptional

First. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad to re-quire or permit any employee to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip.

Second. Or by unknown casualty oc-curring before he started on his trip.

Third. Except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

IN HOUSE BILL

First. That the provisions of this act shall not apply in any case of casualty or unavoidable accident or the act of God.

Second. Nor where the delay was the result of a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time said employee left a terminal, and which could not have been foreseen with the exercise of ordinary prudence.

It must be realized these exceptions are the defenses which will be urged by the railroads when they keep any employee at work more than sixteen consecutive hours. If these defenses shall be too liberal, then by so much do they weaken and nullify the purpose of the law. So it is important to compare and analyze just what defenses each bill prescribes as to keeping the men at work more than sixteen consecutive hours. The Senate bill provides, first, for a "casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip." The word "casualty" in such case would probably be defined "as that which comes without being foreseen—a contingency." (Webster's Dictionary.) So that the provisions of the two bills, in such cases, are practically the same. The words in the House bill "unavoidable accident," "test of God." probably do not enlarge the definition of the Sen. the same. The words in the House bill "unavoluable accorded," act of God," probably do not enlarge the definition of the Senate bill.

But the provisions of the second exception in the Senate and House bills are radically different. The Senate bill provides "only unknown casualty occurring before he started on his The House bill provides "nor where the delay was the result of a cause not known to the carrier or its agent in charge of such employee at the time said employee left a terminal and which could not have been foreseen with the exercise of ordinary prudence."

The words of the Senate bill, "unknown casualty before he started on his trip," are the very broadest possible. There are no exceptions to it. Unknown to whom? The employee, the carrier, its officers or agents, or any of them. It would seem to be the only natural construction of the word "unknown" that it may refer to any person in charge of or connected with the movement of the train. It is evident that in such case some one responsible person will always be found to whom such casualty was unknown, and this would be a perfect defense to the railroad in such case of keeping the employee at work more than sixteen consecutive hours. No such loophole is allowed in the House bill. There it is provided for a delay for "a cause not known to carrier or its agent in charge of employee, and which could not have been reasonably foreseen." This is far different and narrower and restricts the cause of delay to some natural reason outside of the control of the railroad com-The Senate provision is so wide open that it is doubtful if there ever could be any conviction of a railroad under the terms of this act where such a provision might apply.

THIRD EXCEPTION.

The third exception to the Senate bill is nearly as broad and Except when, by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

It needs no argument to show that this language is broad enough to excuse almost any delay on the part of the railroad company. Under its provisions if a train scheduled to pass at a station or side track is delayed, for any cause within the control of the railroad company, this same company could keep its employees at work for a week if necessary without violating the provisions of this act.

Such a provision practically vitiates the law and renders it impossible of successful enforcement.

The provisions of exceptions allowing the railroad companies to work their men more than sixteen consecutive hours are defined clearly and closely and narrowly in the House bill.

The carriers are confined within the narrow and closely defined limits admitted by all to be fair and reasonable.

But in the Senate bill two of the exceptions are so broad and so loose that the railroads could always find some excuse and pretext as a defense to successfully defeat almost any prosecution under the act. It is difficult to realize that any person sincerely desirous of having an effective law upon this subject enacted by this Congress should support the exceptions contained in the Senate bill.

Next, after a comparison of the two bills, it is important to examine them to ascertain if there are any defects or omissions which should be plainly stated and considered.

DEFECTS IN SENATE BILL.

First. The comparison of the terms of the two acts discloses that the Senate bill omits to specifically include railroads running from Territories to States and from District of Columbia to States, except as it may be found that they are all engaged in interstate commerce. This is not a matter of consequence if the prosecution be careful in its allegations and proof. But a little negligence or carelessness on the part of the prosecution in not proving clearly that the carriers above named were actually engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the alleged violation of law might defeat the action.

The other acts of Congress on other subjects remedy this defect, and it is inexcusable now for us to reenact such patent though slight defects.

Second. The Senate bill provides-

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen con-

This language limits the operation of the Senate bill solely to those railroad employees who can be proven at the time of the alleged violation to have been engaged upon a train carrying interstate freight or passengers. This clearly excludes

First. All exclusively mail trains.

Second. Exclusively local or intrastate trains carrying United States mail.

Third. Trains wholly within the District of Columbia.

Fourth. Trains wholly within any Territory.
Fifth. Trains of empty cars carrying neither freight nor passengers Sixth. Possibly work trains.

Seventh. Possibly express trains carrying solely express mat-

This very statement shows that there is thus excluded from the operations of such act a very large proportion of the railroad business and a very large proportion of the employees.

SUCH DISCRIMINATION UNFAIR.

I can not believe it is the deliberate purpose of the minority to so discriminate against such a large number of faithful railroad employees who are just as much entitled to protection as those included within the act. Yet this Senate bill does omit this large class of employees, and the minority apparently

REQUIREMENT OF PROOF.

But this is not the worst feature of this provision. In every prosecution under such act the Government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the particular train with which the employee working overtime was connected was, at the time of such violation of law, carrying interstate or foreign freight or passen-

As a rule, there is no way of identifying the passengers or ascertaining their trips or destinations after any considerable lapse of time. Nothing can be ascertained from the tickets sold, as a rule, and the passengers can not be connected with the tickets or train. In the case of passenger trains, unless the passengers having interstate passage are at once located on that train, are identified and traced, so as to be reached for a prosecution, no adequate proof can be adduced. In ordinary experience it would be probable that three months after a violation of law upon a passenger train had occurred, it would be impossible to find any particular interstate passenger upon that train or to properly prove that such train carried an interstate passenger. This condition would practically nullify the operation of such an act as to all passenger traffic, as it always requires some time for the inspectors to ascertain the violations of the

OPERATION AS TO FREIGHT TRAFFIC.

The requirement of proving that a freight train carried interstate freight would not be quite so difficult, and yet would be by no means easy. The requirements would be difficult and the task of the prosecuting officer would be arduous to trace the freight from the time it was originally placed in the custody of the company, through the processes of its billing, loading, transportation in interstate commerce, and its destination in some other State. This is necessary under the language of the Senate bill, and it is obvious that after the lapse of a year upon any large railroad, with its many millions of transactions, that a very large proportion of prosecutions would fail because of lack of adequate proof.

It is a safe and conservative statement that a very small pro-

It is a safe and conservative statement that a very small proportion of the cases which ought to be prosecuted, and which the employees and public would expect to be prosecuted, under any law could be convicted under the language of the Senate bill. Such a measure is a delusion and a snare, and it is a painful surprise to know if is supported by the many excellent lawyers upon the other side of this House.

DEFECTS APPLY TO OTHER CLAUSES.

The Senate bill seems to very carefully make this restricted definition of "employee on train carrying interstate freight or passengers" apply to the other two of its prohibitory provisions. In both of them the words "such employee" are used, thus referring to the kind or class of employees above described and to the restricted conditions of prosecution above outlined.

and to the restricted conditions of prosecution above described and to the restricted conditions of prosecution above outlined. These evident omissions would practically nullify the purpose of the act, and the railroads might, so far as this bill would be concerned, work their employees for a day continuously if they needed to so do.

TERRA COTTA ACCIDENT.

It may be of interest to the minority and to those who support the Senate bill that the terrible accident at Terra Cotta, Md., on December 30, 1906, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railway could not possibly come within the provisions of the Senate bill, though here was one of the most flagrant cases, shocking the minds of the public and requiring the passage of some adequate law. In that case a regular passenger train had left Frederick, Md., bound for Washington, D. C., carrying interstate passengers, so this train was within the law. But this train was run into from the rear by a train of empty coaches carrying neither interstate freight nor passengers, but the engineer on this train had been on duty continuously for forty-eight hours, except but for four hours' rest.

This period of service should be prohibited by law; it shocks the sensibilities of fair-minded people, and yet by the terms of the Senate bill because this train was of empties, not carrying interstate freight or passengers, such gross excess of service would not come within the scope of the Senate act.

This is only one recent and forcible instance of the very many which could be cited to show the uselessness of passing such a bill, so full of defects as the S. 5133.

WITHOUT HAVING HAD TEN HOURS OFF DUTY.

Third. There has been previously discussed the provisions of lines 4, 5, and 6 of the Senate bill, as follows:

Or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixfeen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours off duty.

But it can not be too strongly emphasized or too well understood that the peculiar wording of the next requirement is such that it may refer to time before as well as after the period of duty. It is not required to be continuous. It is not required to follow the period of work. There is simply required an aggregate of ten hours off duty at some time about the period of service before the employee can go to work the second time. This is too indefinite to support any prosecution.

DEFENSES TOO LIBERAL UNDER S. 5133.

Fourth. The exceptions to the prohibition of more than sixteen hours in the two acts have already been discussed. They are defenses to the railroads where the employee has been kept out more than sixteen hours. They should not be too liberal, as under the Senate act, where it is provided that:

By unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip, and except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal.

There has already been discussed the reasons why these exceptions are altogether too liberal and allow almost any delay for almost any cause to be excused. The act would be worthless enough, containing the peculiar requirements as to prosecution which have already been outlined, but what little virtue might be left would be completely eliminated by the defenses provided by these exceptions. It is safe and conservative to state that with such provisions enacted into law, it would be practically impossible to convict any railroad company of keeping men continuously at work for twenty-four or more hours. Such a condition is not desired by the public or by the employees; and yet such is the bill that is being indorsed by every member of the minority.

Fifth. The Senate bill contains no provision or direction for the prosecution of offenses under this act by the Department of Justice. This may not be absolutely necessary, as the provisions of the general law may be sufficient. But such clauses are usually inserted in such Federal statutes, and their omission in the Senate bill might be taken as an excuse somewhere or at some time to refuse to prosecute under this act. Such an omission is unnecessary and inexcusable, and is covered by the House bill.

IMMEDIATE EFFECT OPPRESSIVE.

Sixth. The Senate bill, by its terms, would be immediately effective, while the House bill would not take effect until one year from the date of its passage.

It is conceded that the railways and some employees must make many changes by reason of the passage of this bill. Division points and terminals may be changed, and employees must then seek new homes, and this naturally requires time to properly carry out.

Yet the Senate bill, oppressive and unnecessary on this point, is supported by the minority.

KNOWINGLY.

There has been much criticism of the House bill by the minority and by the remarks of various Members upon the floor, and especially by the representatives of the railroad employees, for inserting the word "knowingly" in the bill:

Sec. 3. That any such common carrier, or any officer or agent thereof, requiring or knowingly permitting any employee to go, be, or remain on duty in violation of the second section hereof.

. The reason is that it would seem to be abhorrent to all sense of fairness or common justice to convict or attempt to prosecute any officer or agent of a common carrier unless he knew or had good reason to know that he violated the law. The majority of the committee intended and by the bill provided that the prohibitions as to working in excess of sixteen hours shall apply to the railroad without qualification or application of the word "knowingly," because we inserted the following:

In all presecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all acts of its duly authorized agents.

This may not be strictly necessary and probably is the law, but out of abundant caution this provision was inserted, so that the carriers must be responsible for all acts of their agents, and it requires no more proof to show the fact of agency and scope of authority than is otherwise necessary to prove the violations of the law.

The word "knowingly" was inserted to apply to a class of

The word "knowingly" was inserted to apply to a class of cases where a train crew might be called ahead of time or even on time, and some delays ensue in getting the trains out of yards upon the main track ready for the trip. Such delay may be of two or three hours and be entirely unknown and unsuspected by the train dispatchers or other officials who have charge of the train while on the main track and for its trip. The dispatcher may have charge of the train for only twelve hours, for less than enough to violate the law, and yet, added to the time already taken since the train crew was called, would constitute a violation of law on the part of some one. The provisions of the House bill would make the carrier clearly liable and subject to punishment. But if the official, like the dispatcher, acted in good faith, did not know of previous delays, and had no business to know—in such case it would not seem to be fair or just to punish him for permitting the train to remain more than sixteen consecutive hours in service.

In such cases the word "knowingly" simply protects such

In such cases the word "knowingly" simply protects such employee; it requires proof that he had good reason to know or did know of the period of service of the employee. If such can be shown, the official ought to be and would be punished. But if the official does not know and has no reason to know of delays in other branches of the service he ought not to be punished for it. The same rule would apply to the foremen in yards, roundhouses, etc., for delays in other departments over which they have no control and where they have no knowledge or means of information. It would seem to be only fair to protect them against consequences of others' acts except where they adopt them knowingly as a part of their own duty. This word does not apply to the railroad company at all and can not apply to any official who is oppressive and seeks to unjustly treat the men.

It can not interfere with any prosecution of any carrier or of any official who has direct control of the men over sixteen hours, like the superintendent or general manager, where they know of the time on the whole trip, but it does apply to the subordinate officials who can not be convicted by adding some one's else possible delinquencies to their own acts, performed properly and strictly in accord with their duty and authority and in the usual course of business, ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW.

It is objected by the minority and the representatives of the railroad men that prosecutions are delayed by the provision

It shall be the duty of such district attorney, under direction of the Attorney-General, to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him.

And that it is necessary that it be left entirely with the district attorney.

The House provision only follows the present practice of the Government as to all prosecutions under every kind of statute. Clipping from Washington Post of February 18, 1907:

CATTLE CRUELLY TREATED—VIOLATIONS OF LIVE-STOCK LAW BY WESTERN ROADS INCREASE—SECRETARY WILSON WARNS TRANSGRESSORS AND WILL URGE RESTORATION OF MINIMUM-SPEED STATUTE.

The Secretary of Agriculture has certified to the Department of Justice 100 additional cases against the railroads west of Chicago on charges of violating the twenty-eight-hour law regarding the shipment of live stock.

The testimony gathered by the Department shows that these roads handling cattle between Texas and California have kept live stock confined in excess of the thirty-six-hour limit permitted when the shipper agrees to that period.

This makes about 200 cases certified to the Department of Justice, and in every case brought by the United States district attorneys the full penalty of the law, involving a fine of $500, is being urged upon the court.

There has never been any complaint before that such a course of procedure delayed prosecutions, and the very language of the bill precludes such construction.

The act provides: "It shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to bring such suits." This does not require personal direction by the Attorney-General. He may make rules for the conduct of such cases in any way that may seem best; so that ordinary cases need not be submitted to the Department at Washington, but prosecuted at once in the locality. The provision requiring such direction by the Attorney-General will accomplish two desirable things. First, it will lay down a certain policy as to enforcement and prosecutions which will be uniform all over the United States. This will not favor one locality or class of carriers as against another and will not tend to entice good men from one place to another or drive them from one place to another. The operation of the law should be uniform and can only be produced by such a provision. Second, it is always possible to have oppressive prosecutions under this act, which would be discouraged by the fact that the Department of Justice at Washington provides fair and reasonable rules for the regulation of the whole matter.

I desire to append a letter from the head of the Order of Conductors for Minnesota, giving some valuable suggestions as to legislation from the standpoint of the experienced and intelligent employee.

We all realize this measure is not perfect; we know it can be improved, and believe it can be done in conference. For that reason we trust the motion may be adopted.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 15, 1907.

Minneapolis, Minn., January 15, 1907.

Hon. F. C. Stevens, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The purpose of S. 5133, to promote safety upon railways by limiting hours of service thereon, must appeal to every humane person as well as to every trainman.

In its present form it is essentially defective, and in one leading feature it will certainly injure its intended beneficiaries.

It makes three exceptions to its sixteen-hour rule:

1. A "casualty" occurred, but unknown before starting;

2. A "casualty" occurred, but unknown before starting;

3. An accident (to?) or unexpected delay of some other train scheduled to connect with the train of the employee in question.

(a) It may be doubted whether "casualty" is a happy or sufficiently comprehensive term. While it may mean casual happening, it more usually signifies disaster, some destructive or hurtful occurrence. In exceptions 1 and 2 it doubtless refers to circumstances affecting or about to affect the train of such employee. But many things may delay train movement which do not rise to the usual horrors of a railroad "casualty," e.g., in cold weather, the impossibility of making sufficient steam.

(b) The third exception is more patently defective. The hardships railroad "casualty," e. g., in cold weather, the impossibility of making sufficient steam.

(b) The third exception is more patently defective. The hardships of over-hours mostly befall freight-train hands. A freight train, unless "mixed," is rarely scheduled to connect with any other train. But freight trains are habitually scheduled to meet or to be passed by other trains, both passenger and fast freight.

Therefore I am of the opinion that line 2, on page 2, should be made to read: "scheduled to meet, pass, or make connection with," etc.

(c) But the peremptory operation of the sixteen-bour rule should be further qualified.

In our part of the country tavern comforts and eugine houses are exceedingly rare within 50 miles of any terminal station.

If, especially in winter, the sixteen hours of a freight-train crew expires 50 miles or less from the terminal and where no suitablotian some sort of shelter and food, and at their own expense.

But, even thus, the preservation of the engine where there is no engine house must always require the engineer and fireman to remain constantly with it, in order to keep up its fire and a safe condition of its water supply.

With reference to such situations, ī think the act should be amended as follows: By inserting, between "or" and "jermit," in line 7 of page 1, the words "except as hereinafter provided," and by adding to section 1, at its end, substantially as follows: "Provided, however, That whenever such sixteen consecutive hours of any train crew, or any member thereof, shall expire at a point not more than one and one-half hours' run of such train from its terminal station, and at a point at or near to which there are no fair tavern accommodations or no engine house, such crew may, at the discretion of the conductor and engineer thereof, run that train to its terminal, notwithstanding the expiration of such sixteen hours."

I much hope that your judgment may concur with the foregoing suggestions.

suggestions. Very respectfully,

GEO. M. MILES.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the reasons why the majority of the committee decided that the Senate bill would not accomplish the desired result, and why we ask the support of all who desire efficient and practical legislation upon this very important

ASSESSMENT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 25549) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relative to assessment life insurance companies or associations.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out section 653 thereof and substituting in lieu therefor the following:

"Sec. 653. Assessment life insurance companies or associations, sick, accident, and death benefit assessment companies or associations, sick, accident, and death benefit assessment companies or associations, sick, accident, and death benefit assessment companies or associations, sick and accident assessment companies or associations, sick and accident assessment companies or associations set forth in this section shall be incorporated before engaging in business in the District of Columbia; and such companies may be incorporated under the provision of subchapter 4 of chapter 18 of the Code of Law for said District, provided that every company shall have cash assets of not less than $1,000, the bonds to be deposited in the registry of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or other assets, as hereinafter provided; and before the articles of incorporation of any such company or association are admitted to record by the recorder of deeds, the superintendent of insurance of said District shall certify to said recorder that the said company has complied with the conditions relative to its assets herein provided. Any insurance company or association hereafter transacting the business of life insurance on the assessment plan in the District of Columbia, whether incorporated in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, including sick, accident, and death benefit assessment companies or associations, shall file, on or before the 1st day of March, with the superintendent of insurance a detailed annual statement, sworn to by its president or vice-president and its secretary or assistant secretary, showing its true financial condition as of the 31st day of December next preceding; also a statement, under oath, showing that it pays the maximum amount named in its certificates or policies as the same become due and payable, and for the last twelve months has uniformly done so; and shall pay for filing such report as aforesaid the sum of $10 to the collector of taxes. Such assessment companies or associations shall at any time on notice furnish any other information that the superintendent may require. On failure by any such company or association to make and file any of the aforesaid statements or reports within ten days after notice from the superintendent of insurance, its license to transact business in said District may be revoked by said superintendent, and the president, vice-president, secretary, and assistant secretary of said company or association shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or imprisoned in jail for not more than sixty days: Provided, That every insurance company or association whatsoever, anything contained in section 617 of the Code of Law for said District to the contrary notwithstanding, shall make the reports required of insurance companies by subchapters 4 and 5 of chapter 18 of said Code, and as in this section provided; and the companies or associations referred to in this section shall also furnish to the superintendent of insurance business only that issues certificates or policles to individuals for not more than $1,000 the District to the superme court of the District of the contrary of the contrary of association doing a life insurance business only that issues certificates or policles to individuals for not more than $1,000 the District of punicipal bonds the market value of which shall at all times be not less than $50,000 nor less than $10,000 no a single life shall deposit in the registry of the supreme court of the payment of benefits as provided for in the registry of said court, before the 1st day of July, 1907, to guarantee the payment of benefits as provided for in the registry of said court, before the

"No company or association licensed to transact business as a sick, accident, and death benefit assessment company or association shall issue certificates or policies for greater amounts than $500 on the life of any one person.

"All classes of companies or associations named herein doing business in the District of Columbia shall, respectively, during or at the end of each calendar year ending on the 31st day of December, pay to their policy holders for losses or dividends, or invest in reserve for their benefit under the supervision of the superintendent of insurance, at least one-half of all premiums received during that year, besides the whole of any other receipts of such company or association (except only principal or income received from each or securities representing the same which have actually been paid in or deposited by the stockholders of such company or association), it being the intention hereof that not more than one-half of the premiums of any and every year shall be used for any other purpose except for the direct benefit of policy holders; and if any company or association shall fall to comply with this requirement the license of such company shall be revoked by the superintendent of insurance.

"Whenever more than one-half the policy holders of such company or association shall also maintain a reserve equal to the net single premium for whole life insurance according to the Actuaries' Table of Mortality, and interest at 4 per cent per annum, upon such number of the oldest lives as will represent the difference in the number of risks, such reserve to be based upon the maximum amount of insurance carried on such oldest lives and to be invested as approved by the superintendent of insurance have in the superintendent of insurance to suspend the license of sa

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?
Mr. SULLIVAN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts to twenty minutes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to have the gentleman give an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Clerk in my time to read the report upon this bill, which is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24644) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relative to assessment life insurance companies or associations, report in lien thereof a bill (H. R. 25549) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relative to assessment life insurance companies or associations, and recommend that the same do pass, and that H. R. 24644 do lie on the table.

This bill amends section 653 of the District Code, relating to assessment life insurance companies or associations, sick, accident, and death benefit assessment companies or associations, and sick and accident benefit assessment companies or associations, some of these are large life companies, incorporated by various States and doing a pure life business by assessment. Others are local sick benefit associations doing business largely among the poor people of the District, more than half the premiums usually going to the stockholders by forfeitures of policies or otherwise. The assessment life companies usually have considerable assets, but do not maintain a full reserve, and as long as the average of their policy holders are young they are safe enough.

The bill provides that assessment life companies, to do business in the District, must have $50,000 assets if they do not issue policies above a thousand dollars, and $100,000 invested assets if they do issue larger policies, and that these assets shall always be at least 3 per cent of the total risks of the company.

In case of District companies the securities will be deposited with the register of the supreme court. In the case of foreign companies the superintendent of insurance must be satisfied that the securities are properly maintained.

The small sick-benefit companies are required to have a guaranty fund of at least $10,000, and that it be at least 3 per cent of their out-the register of the supreme court. In the case of foreign companies the superintendent of insurance must be satisfied that the securities are properly maintained.

The small sick-benefit companies are required to have a guaranty fund of at least $10,000, and that it be at least 3 per cent of their outstanding life risks. We have also provided by amendment that the expenses of such companies, including dividends, shall not exceed 50 per cent of the premiums received in any year, so that at least the balance of premiums and all forfeitures shall be paid in losses or dividends or placed in reserve for the benefit of the policy holders. At present less than one-quarter of the premiums usually goes to their benefit.

We have likewise provided that when the risks on lives over 45 years of age exceed in number those on lives under that age the excess in the oldest lives shall be secured by a full legal life insurance reserve equal to a single premium for life insurance of such excess of risks.

The other provisious are formal, but very necessary. The guaranty fund must be provided before business begun, reports must be made in detail when required, policies are to be in an approved form, assessments must be levied when needed, and the license can be revoked in case of insolvency or failure to obey the provisions of the act.

The act does not affect purely fraternal beneficial associations, nor associations of officers and enlisted men, civil-service employees, or the employees of a single firm.

We believe that this bill meets a crying want of the District, and recommend its immediate passage. We think no company should do business that does not give back to its policy holders a reasonable amount of risks, and which proportion the amount of guaranty fund, and the sums named are as low or lower than those required by State legislation. These assessment companies have caused dire distress among those who could least afford it.

The provisions which proportion the amount of guaranty fund to the amount of risks, and which

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the most of this bill was pre-pared by the superintendent of insurance of this District. It was introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barcock] for the District. It has been very carefully amended by and has the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee. covers nothing except small companies which were forfeiting 90 per cent of their policies, and when they took in 100 per cent returned from one-sixth to one-quarter to the policy

Mr. SULLIVAN. I wish the gentleman would speak louder.

We can not hear over here.

Mr. PARKER. I am speaking as loud as I can with a slight cold. Has the gentleman heard what I have already said?

Mr. SULLIVAN. We have heard scarcely a word.
Mr. PARKER. I said that the bill was prepared by the superintendent of insurance of this District. These little companies refuse to make returns, and their incorporators-for they were stock companies—put up no capital, but pocketed from 75 to 90 per cent of the premiums, besides forfeiting 90 per cent of the policies. We have therefore provided, what they say is impossible, that they shall not do business unless they give back at least one-half of what they take in from the assured; and we have likewise provided that they shall put up $10,000 as a guaranty fund. We do not think that any sick-benefit company should have any less capital.

Mr. AMES. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PARKER. I would like to yield time to other gentlemen, but I will permit an interruption.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. PARKER. I yield.

Mr. AMES. The gentleman from New Jersey admits that assessment companies now doing business in the District turn back to the policy holders only 10 per cent of the moneys received.

Mr. PARKER. Assessment sick-benefit companies; not the others.

Mr. AMES. This bill provides for them.

Mr. PARKER. And we provide they shall return 50 per cent.
Mr. AMES. And this bill provides they shall return 50 per cent. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from New Jersey, where they perform many kinds of insurance, if he thinks it is good insurance or good policy or sound judgment to make legitimate a business that turns back to the policy holder only 50 cents out of every dollar received?

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman has made his question, and I will say simply that there are certain numbers of these companies that do business amongst the very poor-the colored people of this District-

Mr. AMES. Let me—
Mr. PARKER. One minute. The gentleman has asked his question—and they get the benefit of some protection when they are sick and some insurance when they die. These very poor people are not taken by the regular insurance companies, industrial or otherwise, and some of them can not get the benefit of the fraternal societies, and under these circumstances we have not felt willing to say that the business should stop altogether, if only they return a fair amount to their policy holders. desire to yield three minutes, or five minutes if he desires, to the gentleman from-

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield in order to give some information about the bill?

Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform us, first, whether the superintendent of insurance has the discretion to waive the deposit of bond proposed by the bill?

Mr. PARKER. Not for any District company, but there are many in Baltimore, for instance, and elsewhere, and if he is satisfied that they have an equal amount of assets properly invested he can suffer them to do business here.

Mr. MANN. So that the superintendent of insurance will have under this bill authority to prefer a company under one name and to discriminate against another company.

Mr. PARKER. No.

Why not? Mr. MANN.

Mr. PARKER. Because it is always provided that a company incorporated and doing a regular business of life insurance in a certain State shall make a certain deposit. Then, in a different State, through courtesy, they are permitted to do business if the State authorities are satisfied the deposit is made in the original State of incorporation.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides one company under certain conditions shall deposit $50,000 of bonds here and another company a hundred thousand in bonds and then provides the superintendent of insurance could waive those requirements. How much will it take to buy the superintendent of insurance?

Mr. PARKER. He can not waive the requirements, or, rather, he can only waive the requirements as to foreign companies that do not deposit here.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. PARKER. I will say to the gentleman that one of the best assessment companies—the one that had a great reputation in the United States—is called the "Bankers' Life of Des Moines." All the Iowa people spoke up for it and it has $220 Moines." All the Towa people spoke up for it, and it has $220,-000,000 of risks out and keeps seven and a half million dollars as a guaranty fund. A hundred thousand dollars would be nothing to such a company, and therefore we provided in the bill that that company should keep 3 per cent of its assets invested somewhere.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says in his reprot apply to fraternal beneficial associations. The gentleman says in his report the bill does What portion of the bill exempts them?

Mr. PARKER. The last clause in it. They are very well taken care of by other sections of the District Code, which has been carefully prepared in that regard. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon suspending the rules

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. PARKER. I did not know the gentleman from Massachusetts desired to speak. I beg his pardon.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I did not expect the gentleman would subside so quickly

Mr. PARKER. Is there anything the gentleman desires to

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; but I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ames]

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] should father such a proposition as this on the floor of the House. We have had insurance investigations, insurance legislation, and I have yet to learn of a proposition equal to this. He comes and tells you for the benefit of the poor and sick colored men and women in the District of Columbia that they should be mulcted out of 50 cents of every dollar that they might put away on a sunshiny day. And I do not want the gentleman from New Jersey to dodge the facts in the case, and they are nothing more nor less than this, that his bill is to authorize little companies to do what I consider improper business, permitting their incorporators to take 50 cents out of every dollar collected and return to the poorest class half of what they can possibly save. That is the long and short of this bill. There is plenty of authority in the laws of the District to-day permitting the insurance commissioner, if he sees fit, to wipe out these little insurance companies, and they have no legitimate place in the conduct of insurance within the District. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a word on

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK 1

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes. The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, on behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that this measure was referred to me by the Commissioners, and that I introduced this bill, and from the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary had handled the same subject before I asked that it be referred to them, instead of to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

This measure is a good one. It should be passed. It saves much to many poor people that have been swindled here in the District by different concerns, and if the gentleman understood the situation and had had it presented as it has been presented to the committee I have the honor to represent there would not be a word in opposition to this bill. And I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Ames] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that when they say that these companies are taking the money and are only returning 50 per cent, that cases have been shown where the returns were only 6, 7, or 8 per cent. The department of insurance, together with the Committee on the Judiciary, has made a limit of 50 per cent.

I want to read an extract to-day from the Chief Executive which expresses his opinion of the conditions which exist in the District of Columbia which this bill seeks to regulate. This letter is dated February 16. He says:

Will you not give this matter immediate attention, and put an end to what seems to me can legitimately be called a "swindle" to the insured in the District?

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Now, the matter has been brought to the Executive on account of the abuses in the District of Columbia, and I believe that the Committee on the Judiciary, following the recommendations of the department and the Commissioners, has brought to us here a bill that improves the conditions to such an extent that no man can stand up here and afford to vote against it.

Mr. AMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Did not the commissioner of insurance of the District of Columbia and the insurance commissioners of the whole United States, through their committee of fifteen, recommend to the Judiciary Committee a totally different bill, which did not provide for these companies at all?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand that Mr. Drake, the commissioner of insurance, was heartily in favor of this bill as originally drafted. There are some amendments and changes that have been made by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. AMES. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that the commissioners of the United States, after several conventions, the leading actuaries of insurance throughout the country, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommended and sought for the passage through the Committee on the Judiciary of a bill which did not provide for assessment companies.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill came from the commissioner of insurance of the District of Columbia originally. I do not know anything about the commissioners of the United States, I am speaking of the local conditions here, and this bill ought to pass.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sheppard].

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not sufficiently specific in distinguishing between fraternal insurance orders and assessment associations. Many superintendents of insurance who are hostile to fraternal insurance charge that fraternal insurance orders are really assessment associations, and if this bill is adopted the superintendent of insurance of this District may apply its requirements to fraternal insurance or-ders, although the bill attempts to exempt fraternal insurance orders from its operations. Again, this bill—

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly. Mr. PARKER. Fraternal associations are covered by subchapter 12 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia—a very careful law—and they are excepted by this

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly: but some insurance commissioners with old-line affiliations believe and charge that some fra-ternal life insurance orders are really assessment institutions, and this bill is not sufficiently specific in distinguishing between the two. Again, this bill says that assessment associations shall base their rates upon the actuaries' table of mortality, with 4 per cent interest added, and if you require a rate of that kind it will compel these companies to charge premiums which the poor of the District can never pay.

Again, the bill attempts to make the superintendent of insurance in the District of Columbia in a certain sense a national commissioner, because it establishes rules for associations founded in other States applying to do business here applicable to their operations in every section of the country. It says they shall pay the policy holders a certain portion of the premiums every year, regardless of whether these policy holders premums every year, regardless of whether these policy holders reside in the District of Columbia or in any State of the Union. It is objectionable for this feature as well as the others to which I have referred. This House ought not to pass a bill of this character with such little consideration, and I trust it will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining to this side?

to this side?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I find on examining this bill that some of the assessment companies may do business with cash assets of $1,000, and they may file a report upon payment

Mr. PARKER. Cash in bank of $1,000, and they may have $50,000 or $100,000 deposited.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The provision in the bill, as I read, is that company may do business with cash assets of $1,000.

Mr. PARKER. No. sir.
Mr. SULLIVAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 2. I may remark here that when a bill of this character, dealing with life assessment companies, sick and death benefit, and accident assessment companies, is brought into the House to be disposed of upon forty minutes' debate, on a two-thirds vote, it ought to be a bill well-nigh perfect in order to command that great vote of confidence in the House. This bill falls far short of perfection.

There is a great agitation all over the country against the extension and even continuance of assessment insurance. In my own State a prominent attorney has brought to the public notice the great cost of insurance of poor persons, and advocates the placing of it in savings banks. There are a great many reform measures discussed throughout the country. If this bill is adopted, the probabilities are that it will be argued that it is a model measure and one which other States may well copy. It seems to me that there are not sufficient safeguards for the protection of the helpless class of persons who are dealt with by this bill, and it would be much better to have the bill defeated and allow the committee to spend more time in the preparation of a proper bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 50. Mr. SHEPPARD. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-seven gentlemen have risen— Mr. SHEPPARD. The other side, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. One moment. Thirty-seven is not one-fifth of a quorum; not a sufficient number; tellers are refused; two-thirds having voted in favor of the motion, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Mouser, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Asahel Bliss (H. R. 2177, Fifty-sixth Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, ctc., That the Arkansas, Louisiana and Gulf Railway Company is hereby authorized to construct a drawbridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Louisiana, at a suitable point in township 22 north, range 6 east, about 7 miles north of the town of Bastrop.

With the following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Insert at the end of the bill the following: "in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906. "Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25611) to authorize the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it cnacted, etc., That the Burnwell Coal and Coke Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, tram road, conveyor, wagon, or foot bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at a point about 11 miles west of Hatfield Tunnel, near Sprigg, Mingo County, W. Va., where the same forms the boundary line between the States of Kentucky and West Virginia, in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Brumm, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH TRACTION COMPANY, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24005) granting to the Norfolk and Portsmouth Traction Company the right to operate trains through the military reservation on Willoughby Spit, Norfolk County, Va.
The bill was read, as follows:

Spit, Norfolk County, Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Norfolk and Portsmouth Traction Company, lessee of the Norfolk Railway and Light Company, be, and it is hereby, granted the license and privilege to maintain and operate its electric railway, which has heretofore been constructed under a license granted by the Secretary of War to its predecessor, the Norfolk Willoughby Spit and Old Point Railroad Company, across the military reservation of the United States on Willoughby Spit, in Norfolk County, Va., on such location as may be approved by the Secretary of War upon the following conditions, namely:

First, That the said company, its successors or assigns, shall remove its tracks, at its own expense, from said reservation within sixty days after receiving notice from the Secretary of War that the War Department requires the premises so occupied for the purposes of the United States, and upon the failure, neglect, or inability of the said company, its successors or assigns, so to do, the same shall become the property of the United States, or any officer or agent therefor, shall be created by or made on account of such removal.

Second. That said company shall confine its route to the location heretofore adopted under the license granted by the Secretary of War; and that there shall be fenced in a manner satisfactory to the Chief of Engineers; and that no more trees shall be cut down than in the judgment of the local officer of the Corps of Engineers are necessary to clear a way for the tracks.

Third. That the said company shall carry free over any part or parts of its road and ferry all United States officers, engineers, inspectors, overseers, clerks, and laborers dwelling beyond the limits of the reservation or Ocean View, who may be engaged in Government work upon the reservation.

Fourth, That any sum which may have to be expended after the revertion.

Fourth. That said company shall pay all taxes assessed against the property.

Fifth. That any sum which may have to be expended after the revocation of this license, as heretofore provided, in putting the premises or property hereby authorized to be occupied or used, in as good condition for use by the United States as it is at the date of the granting of said license, shall be repaid by the said company on demand.

Sixth. That said company shall pay such reasonable annual rental as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYNARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

joint resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to so amend internal-revenue laws of the United States that no Federal license for the sale of mait, brewed, fermented, or intoxicating liquors shall be granted to any person who is not legally authorized to carry on such business under the laws of the State in which he resides.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

In which he resides.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas the traffic in intoxicating liquors is a fruitful source of suffering, disorder, and crime wherever it is carried on; and

Whereas the State of South Dakota is seeking to curb and control such traffic through local option and license laws, under which laws the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is entirely prohibited in many communities within the State, and the privilege of engaging in such business is permitted only to those who hold a regular license therefor; and

Whereas the enforcement of these laws by the State is made extremely difficult by the policy followed by the Government of the United States of accepting the special tax required by said Government from all dealers in malt, brewed, fermented, or intoxicating liquors, and granting a license therefor to all applicants regardless of whether such applicants may lawfully conduct such business under the laws of the State wherein they reside. And believing that such a policy on the part of the Government of the United States is an invasion of the police powers of the States; that it is contrary to the principles of comity which should exist between the Federal Government and the several States; that it tends to render State laws nugatory, is detrimental to the best interests of society, and subversive of good government: Therefore, be it Resolved by the senate of the legislature of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring). That the President and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, respectfully petitioned to so amend the internal-revenue laws of the United States that no Federal license for the sale of malt, brewed, fermented, or intoxicating liquors shall be granted to any person who is not authorized to carry on such business under the laws of the State in which he resides.

I hereby certify that the within resolution originated in the senate and was known in the senate files as senate joint resolution No. 1.
L. M. Simons, Secretary.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, Office Sceretary of State, ss:

Filed February 15, 1907, 3 o'clock p. m. D. D. Wiff, Secretary of State. Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Rockland, Westboro, Millville, and Holliston, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Prof. C. L. Johnson, of Harvard University; of the Theodore Metcalf Company, of Boston; of William C. Durkee, of Boston; of the Merrimac Chemical Company, of Boston; of Albert E. Beach, representing the State board of health; of Prof. Lyman V. Newell, of Boston University, and of Prof. C. A. Grossman, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present denatured-alcohol law; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Maple Street Church, of Lynn, Mass., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against the Hon. Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LONG. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Kansas, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 19.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 19.

Whereas the cheaper transportation of grain and other freight is a matter of great interest to the people of the State of Kansas; and
Whereas the people derive but little benefit from the great waterways furnished by the Mississippi, Missouri, and Kansas rivers on account of the condition of such rivers regarding obstructions: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the legislature of the State of Kansas (a majority of the senate and the house of representatives concurring therein). That the United States Senators from Kansas be instructed and the Members of the House of Representatives in Congress be requested to use their utmost endeavors to procure a suitable appropriation to be made by the Congress of the United States for the improvement of the Mississippi. Missouri, and Kansas rivers, to the end that better navigation thereof can be had; be it Further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of the senate to the Vice-President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress and to each Congressman and Senator from the State of Kansas.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body February 8, 1907.

W. E. PITTS,

Assistant Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the House February 11, 1907.

I S. SIMMONS

Passed the House February 11, 1907.

J. S. Simmons, Speaker of the House, D. Y. Wilson, Chief Clerk of the House. STATE OF KANSAS.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, C. E. Denton, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a correct copy of the original enrolled bill now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 14th day of February, 1907.

C. E. DENTON.

Secretary of State,
By J. T. Botkin,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. LONG. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Kansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Whereas the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States has by a decisive vote recommended the passage of a bill introduced by the Hon. Charles E. Littlefield, of Maine, which provides, in substance, that the interstate-commerce character of all shipments of intoxicating liquors shall terminate immediately upon their arrival within the State or Territory in which the place of destination is situated; and

Whereas Kansas has carried on the struggle to enforce her laws in the interest of temperance and sobriety for more than a quarter of a century against the combined influence and efforts of the liquor interests of the States situated on her borders and has received no assistance or encouragement from the Federal Government; and

Whereas the passage of said law would be of the greatest assistance to the State of Kansas, and all other States which have laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, or strictly regulating the sale thereof, in enforcing the same: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein). That in as much as the State of Kansas will be greatly benefited by the passage of said law, we request our Senators in the Senate of the United States and our Members of Congress to work and vote for said act and to use all means which vigilance, energy, and honor may dictate to secure its passage.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the Senate, and passed that body February 5, 1907.

W. J. Fitzgerald, President of the Senate.

W. E. Pitts,

Assistant Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the House February 6, 1907.

J. S. Simmons,

Speaker of the House.

J. S. SIMMONS, Speaker of the House, D. Y. WILSON, Chief Clerk of the House.

STATE OF KANSAS, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I. C. E. Denton, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a correct copy of the original enrolled bill now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal this 14th day of February, 1907.

C. E. DENTON,

Secretary of State.

By J. T. BOTKIN,

Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. LONG presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 8499) for the relief of William Coker; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of E. H. L. Bailey, of Lawrence, Kans., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present denatured alcohol law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Emporia, Kans., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oneida, Kans., and of sundry citizens of Stafford, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, the Iron Ship Builders and Helpers, and the American Federation of Labor; of the Coopers' International Union of North America, American Federation of Labor, all of Kansas City, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of labor and industries from the competition of convict labor and prison-made goods; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Linwood and Brookville, in the State of Kansas, praying that representatives of the railroads of the country be granted a hearing before any reductions are made in the appropriations for carrying the United States mails; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Southwestern Lumbermen's Association, of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for relief from car shortage, and also for the enactment of a national reciprocal demurrage law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, in favor of the removal of the tariff on saw logs and lumber; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, in favor of the adoption of an amendment to the internal-revenue laws providing that no Federal license for the sale of malt, brewed, fermented, or intoxicating liquors shall be granted to any person who is not legally authorized to carry on such business under the laws of the State in which he resides; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

GEORGE L. DANCY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8511) granting a pension to George L. Dancy, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to fill the blank by inserting the word "thirty;" so as to make the

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George L. Dancy, late of Company F. First Regiment Florida Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE DE ROSSET MEARES.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7903) granting an increase of pension to Catherine De Rossett Meares, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine De Rosset Meares, widow of Gaston Meares, late captain, Arkansas Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Catherine De Rosset Meares.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. The appropriation bills, Mr. President, I think are necessarily taking so much time (because their provisions are better scrutinized this year than before) that we are met with a very serious question, whether we shall be able to get them all through. The big bills are almost all of them yet to be considered by the Senate. We have in this week two more working days; to-morrow is mortgaged by the Smoot case and Saturday practically by eulogies, and we have six days next week and one Sunday after that in which all the big bills, with a few exceptions, will have to be considered.

I realize, as every Senator does, the great desire to get measures passed which are on the Calendar, and which are being reported from day to day by the committees. Looking at things as carefully as I can, marshaling our time, I ask unanimous consent that to-day the Senate shall take a recess at 6 o'clock until 8 this evening, the night session to be given to unobjected cases on the Calendar.

I do not think that we can reach the reasonable desires of Senators who have bills upon the Calendar by piecemeal, getting Everyone who is one or two of them through in the morning. interested in the Calendar can come here this evening and we can clean it all up in one session. That will be a great relief to everyone here, and prevent the inevitable scramble in the morning and delay the consideration of appropriation bills by getting bills through when reported.

I do not want anyone to think that upon this matter I am lecturing the Senate. Every Senator feels, I take it, just the same as I do; but to get through, and not be confronted on the 4th of March with one or two big appropriation bills unpassed, I think we must have after this night sessions, quite likely tomorrow night, for the consideration of whatever bill is up. The agricultural appropriation bill and the other bills that have been up have taken days, because we are scrutinizing them here and in a valuable way.

So I repeat my request for unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess at 6 o'clock until 8, the night session to be devoted to unobjected bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess at 6 o'clock this evening until 8 o'clock, and then assemble for the purpose of considering unobjected bills upon the Calendar. Is there objection to the request The Chair hears none. It is so or-

Mr. HALE. Now, I hope that when Senators report bills here this morning they will not use up the time, but let them go to the Calendar, and the clerks will see that they are on the printed Calendar to-night, so that they will all be found there.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES. Mr. HOPKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25234) permitting the building of a dam across Rock River at Lyndon, Ill., to re port it without amendment. I should like to have the bill placed upon the Calendar for consideration to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, as requested.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24987) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus or unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

As the bill relates to the holding of Federal courts and is very short, I ask for its present consid-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that a special session of the Senate is to be held this evening for the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar.

Mr. BACON. Then I withdraw the request.

Mr. HALE. Right here, Mr. President, let me renew my suggestion that the clerks see to it that the bills which are reported to-day are put on the Calendar, so that when we meet to-night we shall find them there.

That is a good suggestion, Mr. President. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. PETTUS. I am directed by the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments to submit a report; which, I believe, requires no action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

OLYMPIC FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. PILES. I ask that the bill (H. R. 15335) for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes in the Olympic Forest Reserve of the United States, in the State of Washington, be placed on the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Washington, the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

DIVISION OF NEBRASKA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2769) to divide Nebraska into two judicial districts; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Nebraska, who shall reside in said district, and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same salary as the present judge of said district.

Sec. 2. That the present district judge in said district and the one appointed under this act shall agree between themselves upon the division of business and assignment of cases for trial in said districts: Provided, however, That in case the said two district judges do not agree the senior circuit judge of the eighth circuit shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district.

Sec. 3. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for said district of Nebraska shall-be held at the following times and places, namely: At Omaha, beginning on the fourth Monday in September and the first Monday in April; at Norfolk, beginning on the second Monday in January; at Chadron, beginning on the second Monday in January; at Chadron, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday in May; at Hastings, beginning on the second Monday

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am advised that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] would like to address the Senate this morning on Senate resolution 142. I therefore ask that that resolution may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should, of course, like to proceed with the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, but I recognize that this question is one of the very highest privilege and that the Senator from Utah has a peculiar claim to be heard. My colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], a member of the committee, also wishes to speak. Immediately after those Senators conclude I will ask to have the appropriation bill taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Senate resolution 142, reported by Mr. Bur-The SECRETARY. nows from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as fol-

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in what I shall say to the Sen-

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to ask that we may have order in the Chamber. It will be very unpleasant to have to interrupt the Senator, and we will have to do so if we can not hear him, because we desire to hear every word that he says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BACON. If I may be pardoned the suggestion, Senators in the Chamber do not seem to realize that in the hum of conversation it is exceedingly difficult to hear Senators who are on the floor. In this particular case-I would not say it in any other-I do trust that we may have the most perfect order. For one I desire to hear the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HALE. There can be no order here that will enable us to hear the Senator unless Senators cease conversing with each other.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senator from Utah will not be allowed to proceed until we have order in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Business will be suspended until there is order in the Senate. [A pause.] The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in what I shall say to the Senate I do not intend to analyze the voluminous testimony taken before the committee or to make an argument thereon. The greater part of this testimony has been before the Senate for more than two years, and all of it for nearly one year. It has been fully argued by the distinguished Senators who have already spoken upon this question. My own testimony, covering more than 125 pages of the record, is before you, and I do not feel that I should trespass upon your time by indulging in any extended discussion. Indeed, I should have been content to submit the case upon the record and speeches made by others, without saying anything myself at all, except that there are certain matters which can be known only to myself; and I think that the Senate is en-titled to a frank statement from me as to my personal attitude respecting those matters. The Senate is entitled to know my personal attitude upon the subject of polygamy and upon the subject of loyalty to this Government. Upon these two matters I shall express myself briefly, but with entire candor.

First, I desire to state, as I have repeatedly heretofore stated, to the Senate and to the country that I am not and never have been a polygamist. I never have had but one wife, and she is my present wife, and I deem it proper to further state that I have never taught polygamy.

There has been a more or less prevalent opinion that the doctrine of polygamy was obligatory upon the members of the Mormon Church, whereas, in truth and fact, no such obligatory doctrine has ever existed. The revelation concerning polygamy, as originally made and as always interpreted, is permissible, and not mandatory. As a matter of fact, only a small percentage of the adherents of that faith have ever been polygamists. The vast majority of the adult members of the church, from its foundation to the present time, have been monogamists.

The Mormon people, however, regarded this doctrine, although permissible in character, as part of their religious faith, and when the law was passed denouncing its practice the execution of the law was resisted on the ground that it was unconstitutional as being an interference with their religious liberty. Appeals were taken to the highest courts of the land, every phase of the subject was tested in the courts, and the law was upheld. Then the church adopted the manifesto against polygamy, which was ratified by the general conference of the people, and thereupon the practice of polygamy for the future was abandoned.

This manifesto, adopted in 1890, discontinuing plural marriages, has been presented and discussed in church conferences repeatedly, sent out in the church book, The Articles of Faith, and in many other publications issued by the church, such as text-books for the various quorums, manuals for the mutual improvement associations, Sunday schools, primaries, conference proceedings, etc., and in that way has been much more widely circulated than the original revelation on marriage. Consequently its text, tenor, and purpose in prohibiting marriages violative of law are known to every member of the church in every part of the world.

But the practice which had prevailed in the period previous to 1890 left a heritage for the succeeding period that was a grave problem. There were in 1890 about 2,451 male members of the Mormon Church who had polygamous families. That these were placed in a position of difficulty was recognized by all who were familiar with conditions. The present conditions in reference to polygamous cohabitation have grown out of past conditions, and both must be considered together to fully understand the toleration exercised by most of the people of Utah, Mormon and non-Mormon alike.

The status of the men who had entered into the plural marriage relation before the issuance of the manifesto had been fixed before that time. There was no power in the church or in the law to change that existing fact. What had been done had been irrevocably done. The only question was as to the future. What should be the attitude of the people toward the future relations of those who had entered into the polygamous status before the manifesto? This problem was a serious and perplexing one.

At that time all the machinery of the courts in the Territory was in the hands of non-Mormon officials who had been vigorous in the prosecution of polygamous relationships. These recognized the vexed nature of the situation and extended the olive branch, as it were. As a relief in this dilemma came an exercise of forbearance on the part of prosecuting officers. The three assistant United States district attorneys for that period were E. B. Critchlow, Frank B. Stephens, and William M. McCarty. Judge McCarty was inclined to continue prosecutions in some cases, but the United States district attorney refused to allow his accounts therefor and he ceased. Mr. Critchlow was the writer of the principal protest in this case and one of its signers. All of these and other Government prosecuting officers testified before the committee to the cessation of prosecutions against then existing polygamous relations, and of the general sentiment among the non-Mormon population that that was the best and quickest way to get rid of the whole question—to let the old-time relations naturally end in death. There was a general acquiescence by the people, both Mormon and non-Mormon, in this method of solving the problem. And this method is working out a complete and final solution.

At the time the manifesto was adopted there were 2,451 polygamous households in the church. Careful statistics have been taken and preserved, and will be found in the testimony, which show that this number has gradually decreased until there was at the time the testimony closed not to exceed 500 such households in existence.

There are twenty-six general authorities of the Mormon Church, including the first presidency, patriarch, apostles, first council of seventies, and presiding bishopric. In 1890 this list of officials was composed of twenty-three polygamists and three monogamists.

The first presidency and council of apostles, prior to my selection as an apostle in 1900, was composed of ten polygamists and five monogamists. In 1906 these same quorums comprised five polygamists and ten monogamists. Of the fourteen general authorities chosen since 1890, only two were polygamists, the other twelve being monogamists.

Of the seven apostles chosen since April, 1900, when I was named, only one was a polygamist, the other six being monogamists. The only polygamist chosen an apostle since 1897 is now 75 years of age, and entered into that relationship before the manifesto. At the time of his selection as an apostle his youngest child was 22 years of age. He has been a member of the church for over half a century, performing faithful and distinguished church service during most of this long period. It was on account of his long, faithful service that I voted for him to be an apostle. Nothing would have induced me to have voted for him if he had been guilty of taking a plural wife since the manifesto.

Of the 96 members of presidencies of "stakes" (ecclesiastical subdivisions) in 1890, 47, or about one-half, were polygamists. Of 165 such prominent church officials in 1906—the increase in number being because of the creation of new "stakes"—only 16, or less than 10 per cent, were polygamists.

16, or less than 10 per cent, were polygamists.

But, Mr. President, it is claimed that there have been new cases of polygamous marriage since the manifesto, and this presents altogether a different question.

I have no hesitation, Mr. President, in declaring to the Senate and to the American people that, in my opinion, any man who has married a polygamous wife since the manifesto should be prosecuted, and if convicted, should suffer the penalties of the law; and I care not who the man might be or what position he might hold in the church, he should receive the punishment pronounced by the law against his crime.

The testimony taken before the committee tends to show that there have been some polygamous marriages since the manifesto. I believe sincerely, Mr. President, that such cases have been rare. They have not received the sanction or the encouragement of the church. They have been sporadic and not systematic in their occurrence.

In respect to the thoroughness of the search made by the committee for such violations of the law, a witness before the committee testified that he had been employed since 1898 in hunting down such cases; that he "had undoubtedly the closest information possible" on this matter. This witness gathered and presented all the rumors, intimations, and suspicions he could discover of new polygamous relations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, or elsewhere, and the whole number thus suggested, though not proved, is less than an average of two cases for each year since the manifesto in all these communities, numbering over 300,000 people.

In most of the cases where rumor attached to persons a violation of the law, such persons are and have been fugitives from justice, and the alleged marriages have none of them been charged to have occurred within the jurisdiction of the United States. In but one instance was there direct proof of the plural marriage, and this, it was testified, occurred in Mexico, where the parties, after importuning an apostle then in charge of the Mexican mission to marry them and being refused, went 75 miles to another apostle, who was visiting the mission, and, as far as the testimony shows (the apostle is dead), without his knowledge that there was a previous marriage and a living wife of the man, secured his consent to marry them.

If any of these cases, resting as they do at the present time upon rumor and suspicion, are actually cases of attempted assumption of polygamous relations, such attempt is not only without the sanction and approval of the Mormon Church, but is in the face of, and in defiance of, its most solemn protest and admonition.

The forbearance displayed toward old relations does not apply to persons who might seek to form new relations; toward the latter there is the most determined hostility and aversion.

The Mormon Church has stopped plural marriages, and no polygamous relation assumed subsequent to 1890 is with the permission, sanction, or approval of the church; that is final and fixed. Every such violation of the law has the express condemnation of the church. The manifesto of 1890 was submitted to and approved by the conference of the church—which means by the body of the members of the church—and it remains the law of the church, binding upon every officer thereof, however high. It can not be repealed, modified, or suspended except by the same power that enacted it.

Reference has been made to an alleged treasonable obligation which it is sought to claim is a part of the Mormon endowment ceremonies. The Senate will understand that these ceremonies are of a sacred character to those participating in them and are therefore not divulged. They were instituted in the Mormon Church by Joseph Smith, some time prior to his death, and are yet given as part of the temple ceremonies; being of a religious, spiritual character, they are for the living and for the dead, a part of the Mormon belief being vicarious performance of ordinances and ceremonies.

There does not exist in the endowment ceremonies of the Mormon Church the remotest suggestion of hostility or of antagonism to the United States or to any other nation. They are of a purely religious nature, wholly between the person taking them and his God, and, as with the ritual of various fraternal organizations, regarded as sacred and secret.

Comment has been made on the fact that upon one occasion, before the year 1890, a single district judge in Utah—one of four such judges, Judge T. J. Anderson—refused to naturalize several Mormons because of an alleged endowment oath. But your attention was not then called to the significant fact, shown by undisputed testimony before the committee, that not only did the other judges not agree with him, but that within a month after rendering the decision referred to the same judge admitted to citizenship Mormons who had received the endowment ceremonies, and he never again refused them.

It is also significant that this decision was rendered in Salt Lake City shortly before an important and bitterly contested municipal election—the contest being between pro-Mormon and anti-Mormon parties. And never again during the six years before Utah was admitted as a State was it attempted to prevent the naturalization of a Mormon on these grounds.

Adverting to the religious and spiritual character of those ceremonies, it, is conceded that such character in ceremonies often has an influence on the conscience and conduct of the persons concerned. There is not a solitary instance where that influence in the endowment ceremonies has been displayed in an act of hostility to the Government. If any effect has been wielded, it has been for the most devoted loyalty to our own

The application in this respect, as to the loyalty of the Mormon people, can be brought home readily by an illustration within our own knowledge. We will pass by the incident of the Mormon exiles from Nauvoo furnishing a battalion for the United States Army in the war with Mexico; the action of the Utah pioneers in raising the American flag in the Salt Lake Valley when that was Mexican soil; the fidelity of Utah to the Union during the civil war. Come to the period of the Spanish-American war and the insurrection in the Philippines—all within our personal recollection.

Mr. President, we are grateful to the men who, on the field of battle, offer their lives, a noble sacrifice for the honor of the nation and the glory of the flag. Whether they pass unscathed amid the storms of shot and shell to ultimate victory; whether they return with maimed and scarred bodies; or whether they meet the angel of death in facing their country's foe, we give to them unstinted praise for their heroism which has made the American flag respected in every nation upon the globe and has placed our own America the foremost of earth's Governments in maintaining the sacred principles of freedom and human rights. Such actions on the part of American soldiers are a proof of fidelity, of loyalty, that is beyond controversy; and well it

The State of Utah came into the Union eleven years ago.

Scarce two years had passed when there appeared on our national horizon the cloud of war with Spain. You all know the causes and the results. When the nation's chief, the late President McKinley, called for volunteers to uphold the honor and dignity of the American flag in the struggle which was at hand, Utah was neither last nor least in the ranks of patriotic response. Side by side, shoulder to shoulder, with every other State in the Union, she furnished her full quota of American soldiers and offered more.

There was no question of religious distinction or dispute then. The Utah Light Artillery was composed of men of differing religious beliefs, including orthodox Mormons who had partaken of their church rites known as the "endowment ceremonies." Maj. Richard W. Young, the commanding officer of the Utah Light Artillery, was one of these. Sergt. Harry A. Young and others who gave up their lives for the flag were of this number. And in so far as these endowment ceremonies may have relation to this Government, an unreserved and indisputably accurate interpretation is given by the record of the Mormons mustered into the Utah Light Artillery, which served in the war with Spain and during the subsequent Philippine insurrection. No man has a right to question that interpretation; no true American will do it; it is inscribed in letters of fire by the history of many a battlefield.

It is not my province to describe the operations of the Utah Light Artillery in the Philippine Islands during 1898 and 1899. There is no hint or suggestion on my part that they were better than any other organization. They were the same as the men from Pennsylvania, California, or the States of the mountains and the plains. The reports of the commanding general have an oft-repeated expression:

As usual, the Utah battery did most excellent service.

A high meed of praise has been given to all those Army organizations which fought successfully through the Philippine campaign, and it was well deserved. Like the organizations from other States, the Utah Light Artillery had its losses. The frequent official report was:

These casualties occurred while serving their guns.

In the face of an accusation of an "oath of hostility," what is the reply of those men of the Utah Light Artillery who had received of the Mormon Church endowment ceremonies? is given in the roar of battle at Malate, before Manila came into possession of our troops; at Caloocan, when the Filipino insur-rection burst forth in its fury; along the Pasig, searching out the ambuscades of a fierce and bloodthirsty foe; in the personal privation, the nerve-racking strain of scores of hard-fought engagements, and the unswerving loyalty of those American soldiers, who never shrank from duty or wavered in the face of the enemy; it is given in the mutilated and lifeless remains of those brave boys whom our Government brought back home to Utah, to be placed at rest by their loving relatives and friends. And here in the Senate of their countrymen, upon the incontrovertible witness borne by the brave survivors and the heroic dead of the Utah Light Artillery, I hurl back the charge of the defamer that there ever was a word or breath of hostility or disloyalty in the sacred religious ceremonies which they or any other persons participated in as members of the Mormon Church.

It is not an infrequent occurrence, Mr. President, for somebody, often a person of prominence, to come out with a declara-tion that this or the other thing is "menacing" the life of the Republic; that we are following the path which brought ancient world powers to decay; that our wealth, our industrial combinations, our free speech, are crowding the nation to destruction. Notwithstanding all these dire predictions, none of which is more absurd than the myth of Mormon "hierarchial" domination, the American Union is going to stand. It will continue a free and enlightened Government. It is founded on the popular will of a liberty-loving people. It discusses its public questions and decides them according to rules of tolerance, humanity, and jus-It is builded on the undying principles of human rights and human freedom. As such it will advance. It will grow. It will increase. It will progress. No other nation will prevail against it. It has the favor of God and the gratitude of its own people to perpetuate it along the centuries to come, as they have maintained it in the century that is past.

Those who lament its possible overthrow or shiver in apprehension at its being swept away will not live long enough to view as a reality the fancied cause of their lamentations and apprehensions, nor will their children or their children's children. The Government of the United States is here to stay and to win over every obstacle. And so far as I am concerned, I formally and solemnly aver that in every vote and action as United States Senator I shall be governed in the future, as I have been in the past, only by my convictions of what is best for the whole people of the United States, under my oath to support the Constitution and laws of this nation.

In closing, let me say, under my obligation as a Senator that what I have said under oath before the committee, that I have never taken any oath or obligation, religious or otherwise, which conflicts in the slightest degree with my duty as a Senator or as a citizen. I owe no allegiance to any church or other organization which in any way interferes with my supreme allegiance in civil affairs to my country—an allegiance which I freely, fully, and gladly give.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, after the very clear, concise, frank, and full statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] concerning his relations to the Mormon Church and to the Government of the United States it would hardly seem necessary that more be said in his behalf. But is must be remembered that the right of this Senator to retain the seat to which the people of Utah have elected him has been seriously questioned; that a protest has been filed against his continuance as a member of this body, and that a committee of the Senate has devoted much time to a most thorough investigation of the charges made against him. Day after day, month after month, and, I may truthfully say, year after year the hearings continued, and when the case was finally submitted for the consideration of the committee they had before them testimony covering more than 3,000 printed pages and more than $25,000 had been expended from the contingent fund of the Senate in securing it. It is right that Senators have a clear and precise knowledge of the facts as disclosed by that testimony before rendering judgment, and because of this, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I am impelled to address the Senate at this time. It is not my purpose to take up the question whether the seat of the Senator from Utah can be declared vacant by a majority vote or whether it must be by expulsion, requiring a two-thirds vote of the Senate, because that question has been so ably discussed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], the Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox]. If I were to follow them I could only concur in what they have said.

PERSONAL AND LEGAL QUALIFICATIONS.

I therefore call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the evidence discloses-and it is not denied-that Senator Smoot possesses all the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution to make him eligible to a seat in this body, and it is not denied that his election by the legislature of Utah was entirely regular in form.

The private character of Senator Smoot is not only not assailed in the evidence, but it is confirmed by everyone who has testified. It is conceded by everyone who knows him that his statement made this morning that he is not a polygamist is true. It is also conceded by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections [Mr. Burrows], who drew the majority report, and I think it but fair to the chairman of the committee, and I think it but fair to the country that it shall go into the Record, that in his remarks in this body he said:

Let me say at the outset, touching the charge that the Senator from Utah is a polygamist, and for that reason disqualified from holding a seat in this body, no evidence was submitted to the committee in support of such allegation, and, so far as the investigation discloses, the Senator stands acquitted of that charge. This relieves the inquiry of its personal character, always distressing, and the Senator stands before the Senate in personal character and bearing above criticism and beyond reproach, and if found disqualified for membership in this body it must be upon other grounds and from other considerations.

We might well leave the question of his personal character there, except that throughout the States of this Union there is a widespread belief that Senator Smoor is a polygamist. It is not for me to say how that impression has been created, but I know that it exists. I have myself presented to this body a large number of memorials protesting against the seating of Senator Smoot, and when upon my return to Vermont I have entered into conversation with many of the signers of those memorials, I have hardly met a single individual who did not have the impression that Senator Smoot is a polygamist. That impression has been thrust upon the country in every possible way. It is believed by the people-good people, honest people, loyal people—and it is a belief which has in large measure created the public sentiment which has been expressed in the protests presented here. For that reason I quote from the testimony of Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the New York Christian Advocate, one of the great organs of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Doctor Buckley is a man who stands high in the councils of the church, a man of ability, of breadth, of courage, an honest man, and a good fighter when that quality is demanded. He has had occasion to deal some of the beliefs and practices of the Mormon Church hard blows. In his tes-timony before the committee he stated that he went to Salt Lake City to study the institution and to investigate conditions for himself; and while he does not approve Mormon institutions, he had this to say about the Senator from Utah:

While I was there I asked all sorts of people, Mormons and others, whom I met how Senator Smoot stood in the whole community, the whole general community, and I got plenty of answers. Would it be proper for me to say that not a syllable was breathed against him; that many commended him highly?

That is the testimony of a critic. Then, in answer to a question propounded by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], Doctor Buckley said:

Every person I saw—and the number was as many as I could see at the principal hotel, at a church to which I went, where there were more than a thousand people, with scores of whom I spoke afterwards—wherever I asked the question, "What kind of a man is Mr. Smoor?"—whether he was a polygamist or anybody believed he was a polygamist—I am compelled to say that I did not find, either in California, where I had been for months at a convention, or while I was in Utah, a single person who said one word against Mr. Smoot. Nor did I find one person who believed that he had ever been married to anyone but his wife or had otherwise lived with any woman who was not his wife. That is the fact in the case. Republicans and Democrats, Mormons and Gentiles, all talked in the same way. How many I saw I can not tell, for I did not expect ever to keep that fact in my mind as of any importance.

Not only that, but if Senators will examine the charges filed.

Not only that, but if Senators will examine the charges filed by the protestants in this case they will find this language:

We charge him with no offense cognizable by law.

That is the language of the protest filed by Dr. Paden and his associates in the ministerial association, and of those who were procured to sign that document by Mr. Critchlow. Only one man, posing as a protestant before this body, has ever made the charge that Senator Smoot is a polygamist; and that charge has never been urged before the committee, nor has one word of evidence been offered in support of it.

SENATOR SMOOT'S RELIGIOUS BELIEFS.

Now that Senator Smoot's character has been so thoroughly established, we are brought to the question of his religious belief, in which he is not only protected by the Constitution of the United States, but by the terms of the enabling act of Congress under which Utah was admitted to the Union. That act pro-

That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitants of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

That was a pledge on the part of the Government which had investigated past conditions in Utah, a government which had condemned many of those conditions and had prosecuted offenders in the courts until there had been a surrender on the part of the Mormon Church of any pretense of right to teach or practice polygamy. Here, I say, was a compact on the part of the Government, made in pursuance of the Constitution:

That perfect toleration of religious sentiment should be secured, and that no inhabitants of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Then comes the proviso:

Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

The State of Utah formed a constitution, and in it embodied these requirements of the enabling act. She has gone on her way as a State and has won distinction by the progress she has made industrially, and has won honor in the standing that she has to-day in the sisterhood of States.

THE PRINCIPAL CHARGE AGAINST SENATOR SMOOT.

But we are met by the charge made by the chairman of the committee, in his opening remarks on this question-

That this Mormon hierarchy

As he calls it-

That this Mormon hierarchy, of which the Senator is a conspicuous member, inculcates and encourages belief in and the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in violation of the laws of the State prohibiting the same and in disregard of pledges made for its sup-

In this charge are two offenses-polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. By polygamy is meant the entering into plural marriages since 1896, when the State of Utah was admitted. By polygamous cohabitation is meant cohabitation between those who prior to 1890 had been parties to a polygamous marriage and who believed-however erroneous that belief may have been-that such marriage was both legal and right.

CONDITIONS PRIOR TO THE MANIFESTO OF 1890.

Let me call attention to the period of Utah's history prior to 1890, because in that year there came a change which marks the present from the past. There is no question that previous to that time polygamy was taught and practiced by the church; no one can deny it. That for a long time it was tolerated by the Congress of the United States is equally true.

In 1847—to briefly state the matter—Brigham Young with his party reached Utah. In 1850 he was appointed by the President of the United States to be the governor of that Ter-That he had plural wives is undisputed. Two years later, in 1852, he proclaimed publicly what was called the revelation permitting plural marriages. Two years after that, in 1854, he was again appointed governor of the Territory by the President of the United States, and it was not until 1862, ten years after polygamy had been proclaimed and practiced, that the first legislation upon that subject was had by the Congress, and that was simply to prohibit bigamy. It is only fair here to state that the Mormon Church did not recognize the word "bigamy" as describing their plural marriages, which they, however mistakenly, considered to be legal and God-ordained. But however mistaken they may have been, they proceeded legally to test in the courts the question of their right to take plural wives. It was well known to the country that Morman marriages, so called, existed to an alarming extent, and yet the law of 1862 contained no provision against polygamous cohabitation among those who had entered into such relations.

It was not until 1882, twenty years after the first act was passed, during which period the institution had developed and become fixed in the minds of every adult Mormon in Utah as a God-ordained institution, that the Edmunds law was enacted. The system had become established as part of a religious doctrine, and was defended by its adherents with the zeal of religious conviction. This can not be denied, and however obnoxious it may be to you or to me or to the civilization of the twentieth century, to the Mormons of Utah it seemed to be a question of absolute right. It became necessary on the part of Congress to put the ax to the root of the tree, and then it was that Congress for the first time prohibited polygamous cohabitation among those who had taken plural wives under the authority of the church. It did it in these words:

SEC. 3. That if any male person, in a Territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, hereafter cohabits with more than one woman, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Congress recognized the existence of the system and, having consideration for the issue of those marriages, proceeded to legitimate all such issue by the seventh section of the act, which is as follows:

That the issue of bigamous or polygamous marriages, known as Mormon marriages, in cases in which such marriages have been solemnized according to the ceremonies of the Mormon sect, in any Territory of the United States, and such issue shall have been born before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1883, are hereby legitimated.

Prosecutions were instituted and vigorously pushed under the act of 1882, and during the next five years plural marriages nearly ceased to be known, but in order to get to the bottom of the situation and to cut out the system root and branch, Congress took advanced action in what is known as the Edmunds-Tucker Act of 1887, by which the rule of evidence was changed so as to make the lawful husband or wife of a person accused of bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation a competent

By that act, also, the corporation of the Mormon Church was dissolved. By that act its property might be confiscated. Thereafter the children born of polygamous marriages might not inherit under the laws of the Territory. But Congress again recognized the painful condition of affairs there, and in section 11 of that act it provided:

Sec. 11. That the laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah which provided for or recognized the capacity of illegitimate children to inherit or to be entitled to any distributive share in the estate of the father of any such illegitimate child are hereby disapproved and annulled; and no illegitimate child shall hereafter be entitled to inherit from his or her father or to receive any distributive share in the estate of his or her father: Provided. That this section shall not apply to any illegitimate child born within twelve months after the passage of this act, nor to any child made legitimate by the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

From 1885 to 1889 there was a period when the Government

From 1885 to 1889 there was a period when the Government of the United States exercised its strong arm of authority. The whole machinery of the law was invoked. sent into Utah; district attorneys were sent into Utah; prosecution after prosecution was instituted, and the result was, according to the testimony of Mr. Critchlow, who was the draftsman of the protest filed against the seating of Mr. Smoot, most telling. He says:

In 1885, and from that time on, prosecutions were conducted with great vigor throughout the entire State. Many of the men of the Mormon Church, and the women as well, went into hiding, and, first and last, as I now remember the figures, considerably over a thousand people were convicted and sentenced.

It is in evidence that there were more than 1,300 convictions and imprisonments under these laws. The church corporation was dissolved; its property was confiscated; the violators of the law were disfranchised; women and children were left uncared for and homeless. Hundreds also were in hiding. The conditions in Utah were hard. The majesty of the law was vindicated; its power was felt by all, and the result was that by 1887 it may be said that plural marriages ceased to be entered into in Utah.

I have in my hand a copy of the hearings before the Committee on Territories of this body in 1892, at which Judge J. W. Judd, of Utah, appeared and addressed the committee. He said that he went to Utah in August, 1888, under a commission of the President of the United States and the Senate, as one of the associate judges of the courts of that Territory. He testified that he probably heard and determined more cases against polygamists than any other judge in the Territory. He said:

I was assigned to the court at Provo, the first circuit. I went there, and during the fourteen months that I held that court under my commission I came in contact with more of these people, more of them were brought before me for polygamic crimes than any other judge in were brought the Territory.

He described the condition that prevailed, the thought of the people, the sentiment that pervaded the Territory, and he wondered whether the great body of the Mormon people believed as the leaders of the church did. He said:

lieved as the leaders of the church did. He said:

I began then to talk to the younger men and the younger women and to see if I could discover whether there was back of that an absolute sentiment in favor of polygamy. I had been told, and the estimates demonstrated beyond doubt, that there was probably not over 2½ or 3 per cent of the male population in polygamy. The settlement of Utah was forty or forty-five years old, and many of the men and women born there were grandfathers or grandmothers. I could not understand how it was that those people were consenting to such continual attacks, to such deprivations, and to such odium in the estimation of their fellow-citizens of the United States in this condition of things. And, gentlemen, I discovered as clearly a marked line between those who favored polygamy and those who did not as the banks of the Mississippi River.

He told how the young peeple would come to his room in

He told how the young people would come to his room in private and talk with him about the situation. He adds:

The younger people would come to me in my room in private and talk to me about it. I could give names and incidents of Mormons high in life, some of whom the chairman of this committee is aquainted with, who came to me and urged me, saying: "Judge, for God's sake break this thing up. We have had enough trouble. We have had all we can possibly stand of it. We have had one right after another taken from us. We have been put in an awkward attitude before our fellow-citizens of the United States, and for God's sake break it up."

Now mark this:

Now mark this:

Others said to me, notably Reed Smoot, son of the president of a stake, and the Republican candidate for mayor, and himself the product of a polygamous marriage. "Judge, we can not stand this thing, and we will not stand it; it must be settled." And I know whereof I affirm when I say before this committee that when the Mormon Church made its declaration of the abandonment of polygamy it was done as much from a force within as from a force without.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The statement which the Senator is reading was made by Judge Judd, I understand, some fifteen woors was a young man.

years ago, when Senator Smoot was a young man.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was made in 1892, fifteen years ago, when REED SMOOT was a young man, before he had entered into politics at all. It appears in an official document of this body, and on the testimony of a man who was enforcing the laws of that Territory that REED SMOOT, one of the young men there who did not believe in perpetuating polygamy against the laws of the United States, was coming to him in secret and staying up his hands in the execution of his duty. He goes further than that. He says:

Moreover, I say that when they made that announcement they simply announced what was a foregone fact; that it accomplished nothing. The thing was already accomplished. I do not believe to-day, sir, that you could any more, by the consent of the people of the Territory of Utah, reestablish polygamy there than you could reestablish slavery in Georgia or Tennessee.

THE SO-CALLED " REVELATIONS."

Mr. President, a good deal has been said in discussion about the revelation under which polygamy was established as a system in the Mormon Church. And it is important to remember that the revelation authorizing polygamy was, as Senator Smoor has stated this morning, purely permissive. It is as follows:

And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another—and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified.

That is the only so-called revelation authorizing polygamous marriages contained in Doctrine and Covenants. It is purely permissive. The evidence given by Doctor Tallmage and other authorities is that it is purely permissive, and if any evidence is needed that such is the case allow me to present you the statistics of the growth of the system in the Territory of its From 1852 to 1890, in a period of thirty-eight years, the population of Utah increased, and in the latter year reached a total of 270,000 souls. The families in Utah were about 42,000 in number. In 1890 the polygamous families numbered only 2,450. Mark the difference: The polygamous families numbered only 2,450; the monogamous families, 39,550. Those are absolutely safe figures, so far as the evidence shows, because, while it is claimed by many that there was not more than 3 per cent entering into polygamous relations-I refer to the male adults of Utah-these bring the number under 6 per cent, and, wanting to be entirely fair, I have adopted these figures. They show that 94 per cent of the males of Utah never availed themselves of this permission, however much they may have believed that they had the moral right to enter into polygamous relations.

But, on the other hand, the authorities of the church, most of whom were polygamists, were insistent in their maintenance of the principle of their faith and tried by every legal method to have it established by law. As early as 1876 the most important case of all was decided. It was known as the "Reynolds case." Mr. Reynolds, as I remember, was an ecclesiastical officer of the church, and believing that, as a matter of religion, they had the right to enter into polygamous relations, a test case was made up that the question might be legally determined. Mr. Reynolds went so far as to furnish the evidence of his own guilt, that there might be no hindrance in reaching a result. But, as we should all naturally expect, the case was determined against them. The principal question involved was whether an act of Congress punishing the taking of a plural wife was an unconstitutional interference with religion, and the court held it was not.

Prosecutions and suits covering every question involved were instituted and carried to the Supreme Court of the United States for final judgment. There was one in 1885, testing the right of disfranchisement; another in 1885, which involved the law of evidence in prosecution for polygamous cohabitation; another in 1887, which covered the question of escheats—that is to say, the confiscation of the property of the church and the disposition of it. So I say the battle was waged for five long years along legal lines, and the constitutionality of every act of Congress was contested, but finally affirmed.

When the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had pronounced valid every piece of legislation by Congress upon this subject, then there was a surrender on the part of the Mormon Church, and from 1887 down to 1890 and since there has been hardly a plural marriage in Utah. Again I quote Mr. Critchlow, because he stands as the head and front of this prosecution, if I may so term it, and he testifies in Volume I, page 552:

The practice of polygamy was a matter—I do not mean the practice of polygamy, but the act of marrying more than one woman—was scarcely ever heard of after 1887—that is to say, no non-Mormon at least, or scarcely any, could ever say that an instance occurred in which he was satisfied that at a particular time and place a new wife had been taken by anybody. The practice of unlawful cohabitation was not very prevalent, and yet, of course, there were many instances where the practice of unlawful cohabitation was known.

In 1890 there was not only a surrender, but a formal surrender on the part of the church. Now, bear in mind when you consider the manifesto of 1890 that the so-called "revelations" to the Mormon Church come only through the president of the church, and before they become binding and obligatory upon the church they must be submitted to and accepted by the people. There is no evidence to the contrary. All of the evidence is to that effect.

It is claimed that the revelation permitting polygamy was re ceived in 1843. No other revelation was received until 1882, when one came regarding the order of the priesthood, and, aside from one other of minor importance, which I do not recall, no further revelation came to that church through the president until 1890, when the manifesto was authorized. There had been a period of thirty-nine years when it was not claimed there had been a revelation; another priod of eight years between such revelations; and it has now been sixteen years since it is claimed that any revelation has come to that church through the president of that body.

I want to say further, in connection with the word "revelation," that the Mormons of Utah have a very peculiar method of using that term. They use it commonly in connection with minor affairs of their church. When Apostle Lyman was on the stand he stated, in substance, that everything done by the church, from the election of the highest ecclesiastical officer to the lowest, was done by revelation. Senator Hoar, with his wonderfully keen power of cross-examination, led him to attribute pretty nearly all their actions to "revelation;" and when other members of the committee interrupted the witness and asked him if by revelation he meant the revelation which, it is claimed, comes to the church—the revelation to which I have just referred—he replied, in substance, "Why, certainly not. When we have to elect an officer of the church we pray for guidance, and then we choose him, believing we are guided, believing that it has been revealed to us that he is the right man." was nothing more or less than the practice of every church in Christendom when they have important offices to perform, that they approach the throne of the Almighty in prayer for guidance, and in whatever follows they believe they have that guidance; and that was what Apostle Lyman meant when he had used that word "revelation" in almost every line of his testimony for a whole day and possibly two days in succession.

Now, then, when the revelation of 1890 came authorizing the president to advise the people that the church law authorizing the president was the proposed by the proposed by the proposed that the church law authorizing the president was the proposed by the proposed that the church law authorized the church law authorized that the church law authorized the chur izing polygamy was thenceforth suspended because the laws of the land prohibiting its practice had been pronounced constitutional, it was done in a manifesto, which was given out on the 26th day of September, 1890, by President Wilford Woodruff. It was as follows:

OFFICIAL DECLARATION.

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized, and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June or during the past year; also, that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

during the past year; also, that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy, or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, and I deny that either forty or any other number of plural marriages have, during that period, been solemnized in our temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage was performed in the Endowment House, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889, but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony; whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of this alleged occurrence the Endowment House was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates during the time specified which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teachings he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

Wilford Woodbufff.

President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Now, I have said that, according to the belief of the Mormon Church, revelations come only through the president of the It should also be remembered that these are not binding upon the church until they have been submitted to the great body of the church, and by that body accepted. When the manifesto was ready for submission, it was deemed best by the authorities of the church to bring the people face to face with the legal situation. The laws against polygamy had been held to be constitutional and binding, and it was the first duty of the church, according to the teachings of that body, to show their loyalty to the Government of the United States. When the great conference of the people was convened, the articles of faith were presented to them for their approval. Section 12 reads as follows:

We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law.

The articles of faith were brought in by Apostle Richards, and in submitting them he made the following significant remarks:

It may be thought that it is superfluous to offer it; but it must be borne in mind that we have a rising generation since this was last presented to us that are coming to years of judgment and understanding; and we wish to have all, old and young, rich and poor, bond and free, that hath faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and in these articles to have a chance to express it by their vote, if they wish.

That assertion of loyalty to the Government of the United States was submitted before the manifesto and was reaffirmed by the church. That being done, the manifesto was presented. It was adopted unanimously, but before that action was taken two addresses were made, one by Apostle Cannon, whose sermon was directed almost wholly to the polygamists. He knew there were men in that body having plural wives who were not in favor of submitting to the law, and he preached a powerful sermon, addressing himself to them and urging their acceptance of the manifesto. On the other hand, he recognized the fact that in that body there were men who believed the time had come for such action, and that it ought to have been taken earlier, and who were saying in their hearts, "Did we not tell you so?" If you care to read that sermon, you will find it in volume 1, page 343, of the testimony. I may see fit, with the permission of the Senate, to incorporate it in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that anything which he thinks bears on this case ought to be read and not put into the RECORD without being read, because we will not have time to read it. We are now face to face with an obligation to vote on this question. If the document the Senator has referred to is important, it ought to be read to us; if it is not important

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I quite agree with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I suggest this not in reference to the particular thing the Senator is proposing to put into the RECORD, but just We are to vote to-morrow. If there is anything the generally. Senator has to submit that we ought to know, I venture to suggest that he have it read into the RECORD. Otherwise we will not be apt to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. HOPKINS (to Mr. DILLINGHAM). You epitomized that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BACON. That is sufficient then, I do not want to con-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I realize the value of the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia, and only because I see that I am occupying more time than I intended I am passing over some of these things; but in order to bring the attention of the Senate precisely to what occurred in 1890 and let them know what the attitude of the Mormon Church was toward the Government, I will call attention to the petition of the president and apostles of the church which was presented to the President of the United States in 1891, and which defined the position of the church and asked for amnesty for the people.

I read this because, as I said before, it states clearly what was the attitude of that body toward the Government. It says:

was the attitude of that body toward the Government. It says:

We formerly taught to our people that polygamy or celestial marriage as commanded by God through Joseph Smith was right; that it was a necessity to man's highest exaltation in the life to come.

That doctrine was publicly promulcated by our president, the late Brigham Young, forty years ago, and was steadily taught and impressed upon the Latter-Day Saints up to September, 1890. Our people are devout and sincere, and they accepted the doctrine, and many personally embraced and practiced polygamy.

When the Government sought to stamp out the practice, our people, almost without exception, remained firm, for they, while having no desire to oppose the Government in anything, still felt that their lives and their honor as men was pledged to a vindication of their creed, and that their duty toward those whose lives were a part of their own was a paramount one, to fulfill which they had no right to count anything, not even their own lives, as standing in the way.

Following this conviction hundreds endured arrest, trial, fine, and imprisonment, and the immeasurable sufferings borne by the faithful people no language can describe. That suffering in abated form still continues.

More, the Government added disfranchisement to its other punishment for those who clung to their faith and fulfilled its covenants.

According to our creed, the head of the church receives from time to time revelations for the religious guidance of his people. In September, 1890—

That was the time the manifesto was issued—the present head of the church in anguish and prayer cried to God for help for his flock, and received permission to advise the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints that the law commanding polygamy was henceforth suspended.

At the great semiannual conference, which was held a few days later, this was submitted to the people, numbering many thousands and representing every community of people in Utah, and was by them, in the most solemn manner, accepted as the future rule of their lives.' They have since been faithful to the covenant made that day. At the late October conference, after a year had passed by, the matter was once more submitted to the thousands of people gathered together.

And it tells how it was unanimously accepted at that time. Then they say:

This being the true situation, and believing that the object of the Government was simply the vindication of its own authority and to compel obedience as to its laws, and that it takes no pleasure in persecution, we respectfully pray that full amnesty may be extended to all who are under disabilities because of the operation of the so-called "Edmunds-Tucker law."

Then the leaders of the church say this:

Our people are scattered, homes are made desolate, many are still imprisoned, others are banished or in hiding. Our hearts bleed for these. In the past they followed our counsels, and while they are thus afflicted our souls are in sackcloth and ashes.

This was the appeal of the ruling class for the relief of those whom they had counseled, and they were praying for those who were now in affliction.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do-for a question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask a question. Does the Senator from Vermont contend that the leaders of the Mormon Church who signed that petition for amnesty have lived up to it?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know why they have not. Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator heard Joseph F. Smith testify that he himself and a number of them who signed the petition for amnesty were not living up to it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know of a polygamous marriage that has been made since that time

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh, you are

Mr. DUBOIS. On you are—
Mr. DILLINGHAM. In Utah, with the knowledge of the church or with the knowledge of the authorities.
Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator—
Mr. DILLINGHAM. When it comes to a question of polygamous cohabitation, there is no question but that there have been violations of it. Joseph F. Smith admitted on the stand that he himself was a violator of it.

Mr. DUBOIS. And Joseph F. Smith admitted on the stand that the plea for amnesty and the manifesto included polygamous living

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And that he had violated the law in doing it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly. The president of the church testified that he had violated that manifesto.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is no question about that; but I was speaking

Mr. President-Mr. HOPKINS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.
Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that Joseph F. Smith is not on trial in this body. If he has violated the law, it is the duty of the Senator from Idaho to go out there and invoke the criminal machinery of the State and not come here to the Senate of the United States and present an argument of that kind against a man who obeyed the law.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not propose to be led off into a discussion of that question at this time, because I am trying to get before the minds of the Senate what the attitude of the church was at that time, and I will take up the other question

Mr. DUBOIS. I thought the Senator undertook to prove that they were living up to the manifesto.

Mr. DHLLINGHAM. I had not said a word on that point. I will later on in my remarks.

Then they say further:

We believe that there is nowhere in the Union a more loyal people than the Latter-Day Saints. They know no other country except this. They expect to live and die on this soil.

Then they make this comparison:

When the men of the South who were in rebellion against the Government in 1865 threw down their arms and asked for recognition along the old lines of citizenship, the Government hastened to grant their prayer.

To be at peace with the Government and in harmony with their fellow-citizens who are not of their faith, and to share in the confidence of the Government and people, our people have voluntarily put aside something which all their lives they have believed to be a sacred prin-

They then made their application for amnesty, which was granted, and in the proclamation issued by President Harrison he makes the statement that it has been represented that the laws have been generally obeyed by the people since that time.

I have taken considerable time to read that petition because it so clearly sets forth what the attitude of the Mormon Church was after that revelation and after the manifesto, and that there had been a complete surrender to the authority of the Government of the United States after the constitutionality of the act of Congress had been established.

Because they fought the validity of these laws so vigorously it has been believed that the church was a disloyal body, but the evidence does not disclose that they have ever questioned the authority of the Government, their contention being ad-dressed to the constitutionality of the acts of Congress prohibiting plural marriages and to other legal questions appearing in the record.

It is a significant fact that right at that time, in 1889, after plural marriages had ceased to be celebrated, shortly before the manifesto was issued, the articles of faith of that church were sent out accompanied by expository lectures by Dr. James E. Talmage, the greatest authority in the church upon all matters of doctrine. The book was issued in 1889 as one of the authorized publications of the church by the direction of the first presidency and at the expense of the church. Since that time this book has been placed in the hands of all the teachers of the church; it is studied in all the schools of the church; every missionary of the church carries it wherever he goes. short, it is an authoritative declaration of the doctrines in respect to the matters it contains.

I turn to the twelfth section of the articles of faith, which I have already read.

SUBMISSION TO SECULAR AUTHORITY.

We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law.

The author of these lectures says in relation to this:

Among other virtues the church in its teachings should impress the duty of a law-abiding course, and the people should show forth the effect of such precepts in their excellence as citizens of the nation and as individuals in the community of which they are part.

I do not stop to read further from that section but proceed to the third section, the title of which is "Obedience to the authority enjoined by Scripture." Under this are two pages of citations from Scripture, showing it to be the duty of a church to recognize such authority.

The next section is entitled "Examples set by Christ and His apostles." Then follow three pages of the teachings of Christ and His apostles, inculcating precisely the same doctrine.

The next subdivision of the lecture relates to the "Book of Mormon teachings," and in that I find the same doctrine is promulgated.

The next subdivision is entitled "Mormon revelation," and under that head the writer makes the following quotation:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land, wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.

I might make other quotations, but must hasten on. There is, however, one which I particularly desire to read:

And that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before me; therefore I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land.

Under the authority of that provision they defended the cases before mentioned until the acts of Congress were pronounced constitutional, and then they surrendered and issued the manifesto.

I might go further and read other extracts of the same character, but I forbear.

I come now to section 23. The author says:

I come now to section 23. The author says:

23. An illustration of such suspension of divine law is found in the action of the church regarding the matter of plural or polygamous marriage. The practice referred to was established as a result of direct revelation, and many of those who followed the same felt that they were divinely commanded so to do. For ten years after polygamy had been introduced into Utah as a church observance no law was enacted in opposition to the practice. Beginning with 1862, however, Federal statutes were framed declaring the practice unlawful and providing penalties therefor. The church claimed that these enactments were unconstitutional and therefore void, inasmuch as they violated the provision in the National Constitution which denies the Government power to make laws respecting any establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. Many appeals were taken to the national court of final resort, and at last a decision was rendered sustaining the antipolygamy laws as constitutional and therefore binding. The church, through its chief officer, thereupon discontinued the practice of plural marriage and announced its action to the world, solemnly placing the responsibility for the change upon the nation by whose laws the renunciation had been forced.

That is a clause contained in a book issued by authority, and, as I said before, placed in the hands of every preacher and every teacher and every missionary and introduced into every church school in the State of Utah as the doctrine of the Could any greater absurdity occur than to claim that church. the church which holds and teaches such doctrine as that could require its members to take a secret oath of hostility to the United States such as has been discussed by the Senator from Utah this morning, which would in effect make him guilty of treason against the United States?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question? Those are the articles of faith?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The articles of faith.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is also true, is it not, that that book is circulated by the church more than all the rest of books put together?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think the evidence shows that it is circulated more than all other books put together, because it is a full explanation of the doctrines of the church on every subject that is treated upon by the articles of faith.

CONDITIONS IN UTAH AFTER THE MANIFESTO OF 1890 AND PRIOR TO HER ADMISSION AS A STATE IN 1896.

With the year 1890, and the promulgation of the manifesto forbidding plural marriages, ends the first period in Utah's history. The new era in the development of Utah, which the Senator from Utah so well represents, had its beginning in the manifesto and in President Harrison's proclamation of amnesty. I advance without hesitation the proposition that the conditions during the second period, extending from 1890 to 1896, show that the Mormon Church and people were sincere. I do not mean to say that there were not individual exceptions. Until the millennium comes there will be lapses in virtue; there will be individual violations of the law in every State and in every country. But the evidence shows that in the mass the people of Utah, two-thirds of whom are Mormons, were lawabiding citizens during that period and have remained so until the present time.

I do not care to base this assertion upon the testimony of prejudiced persons, but I go for information to the official report of 1891, of the governor of Utah, Arthur L. Thomas, who was appointed to his office by the President of the United States. He says:

When the Mormon people declared, at a general gathering, that polygamy was a vital part of their religion. I accepted their action as a sincere expression of their views. Now that they have, in the same public way, resolved to refrain from violating the law prohibiting polygamy in the future, I think their action should be regarded as sincere until there is good reason for thinking otherwise.

In 1892 Governor Thomas makes another report and says:

It has a governor thomas makes another report and says:

I know of nothing which has transpired during the past year to lead me to qualify the opinions above expressed, so far as the Mormon leaders and the Mormon people as a whole are concerned. I do not believe that any polygamous marriages have taken place with the consent or permission of the Mormon leaders, and I also believe that it is the sincere intention of the Mormon people not to approve or sanction polygamous marriages for the future. I also believe that the large majority believe it now to be wrong to live in unlawful cohabitation.

He does not say all, but he says that a large majority now

He does not say all, but he says that a large majority now believe it to be wrong to live in polygamous cohabitation.

There is no doubt, however—for the evidence on this point is conclusive—that many persons who contracted polygamous marriages before the manifesto was issued have been guilty of unlawful cohabitation. Human nature does not change by the kind of church it enters, and there are Mormons who, because they have the opportunity, are deliberately violating the law prohibiting unlawful cohabitation. It is to be regretted that the sincerity of a whole people in seeking to accomplish a great reform should be placed under suspicion by the acts of a few but such is the case. It will probably be some time—it may be years—before the practice of unlawful cohabitation will finally cease. I think, though, that if the majority of the Mormon people could have their way, it would cease now and forever.

In the year 1893 Caleb W. West was governor of Utah. He says in his report:

As hereinbefore stated, the practice of polygamy has been absolutely abandoned. The People's or Mormon Church party has been dissolved and no longer has either an organization or membership. The highest authorities of the Mormon Church, their chief men and leaders, upon all proper occasions have publicly denied that they claim the right to, or do, or will attempt to exercise any church influence or power to control the political action of its members.

In 1895 Governor West again reports:

It should be, and I trust is, a matter of infinite satisfaction to the whole country, as it is to the people of this Territory, that the movement begun in 1886 to obliterate the divisions, remove the bitterness, and heal the strife existing in Utah, which had so long prevented its admission as a State, are about to be consummated in the entrance of Utah into the Union as a great and prosperous State with a homogeneous, thriving, contented, peaceful, and happy people.

It will be noted that all that evidence comes from an official source, a source so far removed from church influence that added weight is attached to it.

CONDITIONS EXISTING SINCE THE ADMISSION OF UTAH AS A STATE.

Mr. President, it should also be remembered that the new attitude of the Mormon Church toward polygamous marriages was adopted ten years before Reed Smoot became an apostle. It should also be remembered that Utah became a State four years before Reed Smoot became an apostle, and in the enabling act and in the constitution itself is given that provision already recited:

That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship: Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

What is there in evidence in this case against REED SMOOT upon which it can be claimed that he should be denied his seat in this body?

There are some peculiar things, Mr. President, disclosed in these books of evidence, things which have surprised me, which I can not fully understand, but which it is necessary to examine when we consider the condition of affairs in Utah since the admission of that State into the Union.

This question has come to me, as the evidence has been pre-sented, Is there a well-grounded public sentiment in Utah back of this movement to unseat REED SMOOT? If there is a general public sentiment of that character existing among the people of I'tah, why was Reed Smoot ever elected? Not a shred of evidence has been presented to the committee indicating that there was any attempted domination of church authority, that any unfair means were taken, or any undue influence exerted to bring about his election to this body.

The testimony discloses that there is a ministerial association in Utah. Another agency in this prosecution is a Mr. Critchlow, who drew for that association the protest which has been filed, and another agent is one Mr. Owen, whose testimony I propose to examine. I have been unable to discover any well-defined public sentiment in Utah supporting this protest, and, this being so, I have been led to examine the evidence to ascer tain how it happened to be made. In this connection I call attention to the evidence of Mr. Critchlow. It will be found in volume 1, page 601, where, in answer to a question by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveride], he said that he wrote this protest. He goes on to tell how it happened. He tells how he prepared the protest in the Roberts case in the first place; and he then says:

Mr. Critchlow. When this matter came up he [referring to Doctor Paden] again applied to me and said that he was one of the committee of the ministerial association; and again, as a matter of general interest as a citizen. I took the matter up and studied over it considerably, and with him drafted this protest. It was then to have been submitted as a protest from the ministerial association. I stated to him that, on account of the prejudices which had been engendered in the State against the ministerial association—

Now mark this-

I stated to him that on account of the prejudices which had been engendered in the State against the ministerial association—

Then in brackets-

because up to that time they had been the only persons who had ever protested against the condition of affairs there—if others than members of the ministerial association could be gotten to sign that protest it would have much more weight locally and perhaps some more weight in the country at large.

That was a most remarkable statement. Note its significance. The only persons who had ever protested against the condition of affairs there was this ministerial association, and for that reason there should be other names on this protest.

He then goes on to tell how he personally undertook to get those names. Later on in his testimony I asked him this question:

Senator Dillingham. Then are we to understand that this movement was really inaugurated and pushed by the ministerial association in the first instance?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. In the first instance it was inaugurated by them because, if I may say so, they were up to that moment—

Here he repeats that assertion-they were up to that moment the only persons who ever made any pub-lic protest against the condition of affairs in that State.

Later on in his testimony, in answer to the question by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], he testified as Senator Overman. I understand you reduced this to form?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. I reduced this to what I supposed to be a proper form of protest.

Senator Overman. And you say that expresses the general sentiments of the needle?

Senator Overman. And you say that expresses the general sentiment of the people?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes; I do.
Mr. Van Cott. As to this general sentiment that you have mentioned, did any of them come forward and volunteer to sign your protest?

Mr. Critchlow. No, sir. They knew nothing about it until they were asked to sign it.
Mr. Van Cott. And they never formed any affirmative movement to have a protest filed?

Mr. Critchlow. No, sir.
Mr. Van Cott. With the exception of the ministerial association?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. That is all.
Mr. VAN COTT. When you prepared this protest did these nineteen protestants meet together?
Mr. CRITCHLOW. No, sir.
Mr. VAN COTT. You obtained signatures separately?

I do not stop to read further. The portion already cited shows just what the condition was in Utah at that time. was no general sentiment back of such a proposition as this.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does it not show the Senator that Mr.

Critchlow did not even read the petition of some of the signers?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It does show that.
Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Gladly.
Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the Senator from Vermont how many in numbers did the Ministerial Association of Utah at that time consist of, or about the number?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not remember that the evidence discloses the number of the association's membership. There are seventeen signers, as I now remember, to the protest, part of them belonging to the ministerial association and part of them Nine members of the ministerial association signed the protest, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] informs

Mr. PERKINS. Does that comprise the whole ministerial association'

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know. I would not say whether it did or not.

Again I refer to page 590 of volume 1 of Mr. Critchlow's testimony, where he says:

I think I ought to say in that connection that never at any time, so I think I ought to say in that connection that never at any time, so far as I am aware, were the personal qualifications of Mr. Smoot or his fitness, outside of his relations to the presidency and apostolate of the church, brought into question by anyone.

Senater Dillingham. May I inquire, in that connection, who was responsible for this form of petition that was sent broadcast from over the country?

Mr. Chitchlow. You are referring to the protest?

Senator Dillingham. I am referring to the petitions that have come into the Senate from every State and almost every town in the country protesting against the seating of Mr. Smoot.

Mr. Critchlow. I can only speak from information, and that is to the effect that it is due to the concerted action of certain organizations of women, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the International Congress of Mothers, or some such organization as that, and, I think, the Interdenominational Council of Women, if I have the name correctly, but I speak only from information on that subject, there being no organization among the protestants or any efforts of any kind made by the protestants.

Then the question came:

Then the question came:

Senator Dillingham. Did the ministerial association have anything to do with that, so far as you know?

Mr. Critchlow. I know nothing about it, but I assume from the general situation that as far as possible they were in sympathy with and probably forwarding certain of the petitions. I may say, Senator, there were certain of the petitions forwarded which I think practically all of the non-Moormons of Utah deprecated; that is, those charging, in express terms, Mr. Smoot with being a polygamist.

There we get a glimpse of the manner in which many of the good women of this country have been deceived, and they are good women, sincere women, possessed of high ideals and lofty purposes, lovers of their country, lovers of humanity, devoted to every good work and who have been doing God's service, as they think, in forwarding these petitions. This, I say, is the way in which many of these good women have been deceived. I have been surprised at the extent to which this vile libel has been believed. From my own experience I may say I have never discussed the question of Senator Smoor's expulsion with any woman who had not entertained the belief that REED SMOOT was a polygamist. It is too bad. It is a crime against society to have such a false report go out. One of these protestants, Mr. Leilich, made a protest of his own and filed it here, charging that REED SMOOT is a polygamist, but refused to give the basis upon which the charge was made. He left the libel standing in the record, and it has gone from one end of the country to the other, has gone into the homes of the country, and the good people of this country believe a lie regarding this man.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to state that in all the millions of petitions which were presented to the Senate there is not one of them, I think, that alleges that REED SMOOT is a polygamist.

The women of this country understand the question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They do not understand, Mr. President, that he is not a polygamist, so far as my observation goes.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] in his remarks the other day cited the case of a minister from Utah—I do not remember his name—who within the last year or two throughout the East went about preaching that Senator Smoot was a polygamist, and professing to give the names of his vari-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The name of that minister was Clemen-

Mr. DILLINGHAM. As I say, I do not remember his name, but I remember the incident.

HOW EVIDENCE OF PLURAL MARRIAGES HAS BEEN SOUGHT.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of Mr. Charles M. Owen, found in volume 2, page 395, which indicates to some extent how this case has been made up and by whom it has been made. Mr. Owen testifies that in January, 1899-so long ago as that-

January, 1899—so long ago as that—

In January, 1899, I received an offer from the New York Journal to act as its correspondent in the auti-Roberts campaign. The New York Journal was then opening or had determined to open a campaign having for its purpose the unseating, if possible, of Brigham H. Roberts, then elected to Congress, in the House of Representatives. I accepted the offer under the provision that it should not interfere with my engineering work. Later it became such a burden that it was impossible to carry on the two, both my engineering work and my newspaper work, and by September of that year—

Mr. Worthington, What year was that?

Mr. Owen, 1889. I gave up my engineering practice entirely, to devote myself to the carrying on of the antipolygamy or anti-Roberts campaign.

Then he states that he remained with the New York Journal until 1900, and then makes the statement:

I was subsequently retained-

Mark the statement-

I was subsequently retained by the Woman's Interdenominational Council, of New York, for the special purpose of making further investigation in regard to the State of Idaho, which I did.

That completed I returned to my engineering practice and stayed with it until January, 1903—the 1st of January, 1903—when I was again retained on behalf of the protestants in the Smoot investigation and my duties laid along the former lines of investigation as to the practice of polygamy, and also of preparing the whole evidence to be laid before the Senate Committee on Pricileges and Elections in the matter of Mr. Smoot's right to a seat in the Senate of the United States.

He takes the whole credit for securing all this evidence presented to the committee. He was asked:

sented to the committee. He was asked:

Mr. Tayler. To what extent have you traveled over Utah and the surrounding country gathering information?

Mr. Owen. Over almost the whole of Utah. There is a small section in the south, in St. George, and the southeast corner of Moab and Monticello that I have not been into at all. With that exception, however, I think I can say that I have been all over the whole of Utah, almost settlement by settlement, at different times; over a large portion of southeastern Idaho and southern Idaho and western Wyoming completely.

Mr. Tayler. And in making these journeys what effort have you made to learn what the facts were? How would you prosecute your inquiries?

Mr. Owen. There is hardly a settlement throughout Utah, Idaho, or Wyoming, a purely Mormon settlement, where there is not either an apostate or a member of the church in good standing who is opposed quietly to the practices; there is hardly a settlement where I do not know somebody whom I can trust and whose information I can rely upon. They do not dare to express themselves openly, but under the seal of confidence and protection as to their identity I have undoubtedly the closest information possible, and I have never accepted any one man's statement about any one person's polygamy. I have checked and checked and checked, and not until I have satisfied myself of the truth of the condition have I ever made any statement about it.

These quotations from Mr. Owen's testimony sufficiently indicate who he is and the character of the man who has had charge of the work of securing evidence under the retainer of the ministerial association.

I find also, through an examination of the accounts of the Secretary of the Senate, that Mr. Owen has received from the contingent fund of the Senate something over a thousand dollars for attendance as a witness before the committee and for his traveling expenses.

THE RESULT OF THE QUEST.

What has been proved? What has he produced? No legal proof has been presented to the committee of any plural marriage in Utah since the manifesto of 1890, made with the knowledge of the church authorities or by their connivance.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. With pleasure.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not true that not only have there been no plural marriages in Utah since 1890 with the consent of the Mormon Church, but is it not also true that there have been no plural marriages contracted with or without the authority of the church inside of the United States, and that the one where there was any proof secured occurred in Mexico, and that the other, of which there was rumor only, occurred in Canada?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think that is true. I know of that one only.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. DUBOIS. Do each of these Senators contend that none of the apostles-apostles, mind you-has entered into a plural marriage since the manifesto?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I can answer that question. That was just what I was going to take up.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will bunch the question, and ask, Does the Senator from Indiana contend that the apostles of the Mormon Church have not entered into plural marriages since the mani-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I object to being bunched: but if the Senator from Vermont wishes me to do so, I will answer that one question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very well.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. There were two of them who entered into polygamous relations.
Mr. DUBOIS. Plural marriages?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; plural marriages; and they have been deposed from their offices, expelled from the Mormon Church, and are now fugitives from justice.

Mr. DUBOIS. Immediately before the final vote is taken in the Smoot case—that is irrelevant, however—you admit that apostles have entered into plural marriages since the manifesto?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I do not. I say if they did-I do not think that has been proven by evidence.

Mr. DUBOIS. That is also irrelevant.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I do not intend—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must insist upon the rule that Senators address the Chair and receive recognition before proceeding.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I am not conducting this debate, but I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to what I remember of the testimony which he has before him. and he says that it is not proven; but I have not yet heard the Senator from Idaho or anybody else who is against Senator Smoot, in talking about the alleged plural marriages of the two apostles, state that it is not true that both of them have been deposed from their official positions, expelled from the church, driven from the country, and are now fugitives from justice. The Senator from Vermont will know whether or not the evidence does not show that that action was taken against them upon the motion of Senator Smoot. It is only fair to state that.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will answer the Senator's question as to John W. Taylor, who, I suppose, is the apostle to whom the Senator refers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I can not yield to that Senator or any body else for a colloquy. I will answer his question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to know whether the Senator from Indiana

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has not yielded to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, when this investigation was in progress, it appeared in the evidence of Mr. Owen that by repute Apostle Taylor and Apostle Cowley had since 1890 taken plural wives. That was as far as he went. He knew taken plural wives. That was as far as he went. He knew nothing about it. It was by repute pure and simple, Warrants were issued summoning these apostles to appear before the committee, but they failed to come. Subsequent investigation disclosed the fact that they were in Canada, beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, and, so far as I know and so far as the evidence discloses, they are in Canada at this When Senator Smoot was upon the stand he was asked time. this question:

Mr. Worthington. * * * What knowledge, if any, have you as to Apostle Taylor having taken a plural wife since the manifesto, except the evidence which has been given in this case?

Senator Smoor, That is all I know about it—what I have heard here. I never heard of it before I heard of it in this room.

That is a clear and explicit statement. Later on in one of the councils of the church the question of the standing of these men was raised. They have a custom in the Mormon Church of passing upon the character of their various officials. They call it "sustaining," I think, the person. It appears that Senator Smoor was present at the first council held after his return to Utah that year and he questioned the advisability of sustaining these men against whom this charge had been made. The president of the church replied that he must know that no one could be deposed without a trial. So, under these conditions, they were "sustained" for the time; but in October, 1904, two years before the ending of the taking of testimony in this case, upon the initiation of Senator Smoot both of these apostles were deposed from the apostleship and have, so far as anybody knows, never been in the United States since that time. There is not one word of testimony showing that either one of them was married in the United States or that any officer of the church ever knew of their having been married in the United States. All who testified were as clear and distinct in their denial of any knowledge of such marriages as Senator Smoot has been,

Mr. Owen mentions one Newton, and says he is reputed to have taken a plural wife since 1890. No one knows anything about Newton, because when last heard from he was in Alaska. We do not know whether such marriage occurred or not. It is simply a question of repute. Very likely the charge is true. I think there have been marriages; but so far as the evidence goes it fails to establish a single plural marriage in Utah. Another case is that of A. M. Cannon-Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. With pleasure.
Mr. DUBOIS. Does the Senator from Vermont remember that Mr. Newton, with his plural wife and baby, was subpensed to come here and testify, with the statement that his expenses would be paid, but that he did not come?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; I was not aware of that fact; but if the Senator says so, I have no doubt it is true.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator does say so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. As I have already said, I think there have been plural marriages, but am of the opinion that they have been exceedingly rare, and those who have entered into them have not done so openly or with the knowledge or with the approval of the church, and the attitude of the church as a body is the question most in issue here.

Returning to the case of Mr. Cannon, it was claimed that he was married on the high seas. It was not claimed that he was married in Utah. He died twenty days after his reported marriage, and the evidence of the fact is the statement of his wife, who says that he confessed to her on his dying bed that he had married the person mentioned, and the wife says he died of remorse because of having done so. He was a prominent man in Utah, a man respected by everybody on both sides of this question. I have seen an editorial in the Salt Lake Tribune that paid him the highest tribute imaginable for worth and general excellence. Personally I have no doubt that he did take a plural wife, as stated, but secretly and without the knowledge of his closest friends. And from what has been said of his character I am prepared to believe the statement of Mrs. Cannon regarding the sense of remorse.

There is also the case of J. M. Tanner.

Mr. DUBOIS. He is an apostle? Mr. DILLINGHAM, Tanner?

Mr. DUBOIS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No; I do not understand that he is.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator is right. But he is a high officer of the church.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. He was a teacher. He has been deposed from the church. He is also in Canada. If he has ever married, we do not know when it was, where it was, or by whom, and there is not a word of evidence showing that he was married with the knowledge of the church. The next case is that, alleged to have occurred in Mexico, of James F. Johnson and Mrs. Kennedy, mentioned by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] this morning. The evidence shows that, being in Mexico, they went to Apostle Tensdale and asked permission to be married. He told them that it was against the law of the church to take a plural wife and utterly refused consent. It now appears, however, that they made a secret journey of 70 miles through the mountains, where, it is said, they found a missionary, who performed the marriage ceremony, but it was not disclosed to him that it was a plural marriage. Then we have the case of B. Cluff, jr., president of the academy at Provo. He went on a long trip to South Amer-While in Mexico he married a Miss Reynolds, formerly a pupil of his, I think. The evidence tends to show that they were married in Mexico, but by whom and under what circumstances nobody knows.

Mr. HOPKINS. But without the sanction of the church. Mr. DILLINGHAM. Without the sanction of the church and out of the jurisdiction of the United States. He is in Mexico now.

The protestants, through their agents, have raked and scraped the country to find evidence of bad faith on the part of the church, and in their zeal they bring before the committee the peculiar case of George Teasdale, who is charged with having taken a plural wife. It appears that he had entered into a celestial marriage with a servant in his family, a deformed person, but they never cohabited. It is true that he took a wife after 1890. There is no question about it. His marriage to this maid was afterwards declared to have been void. clear that when he married he supposed that he had the right to do so. There was also Charles Merrill, son of the apos-tle. He had a legal wife and a plural wife. The legal wife died, and instead of doing what he ought to have done, by marrying the plural wife, he married another woman. It was not technically a case of bigamy, but it was reprehensible in the highest degree. There is also the case of Josiah Hickman, who was a professor at Provo. His legal wife was dead, but his plural wife was living, and he is living with her without having remarried her. Mr. Hickman, a gentleman of education and culture, testified that he had always intended to remarry her, but, in his eyes, she was just as much his wife as if he had remarried her. I respected the man for the statement he made. I only cite the case for the purpose of showing how closely to the ground this dagnet is drawn to bring in cases which can be

Mr. Owen also mentioned John Silver, Heber Bennion, Winslow Farr, and B. Rathall. It is only by repute that we know they have taken wives, for they were not summoned here. a word of evidence was produced against them, nor were they summoned to come here and explain. I also refer to the case of Thomas Chamberlain, who was summoned, but did not appear. There may have been a reason for his not coming, and he may have married a plural wife. I do not know

Mr. Owen also testified that Apostle Merrill, an old man, was reputed to have taken a plural wife. During the session of the committee and while he was on his dying bed he made an affidavit and sent it to the committee indignantly denying the report and affirming that the charge was not true and that he had taken no plural wife. David Eccles, also by repute, was said to have taken a plural wife. He appeared before the committee and denied the charge, and there is no proof against him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The woman he is charged with having married was also here.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The woman he is charged with having married also appeared.

Taking these cases and making an analysis of them, it appears that five cases, perhaps, have occurred where there may have been plural marriages. Four of the men connected with those plural marriages are fugitives from justice, living in Canada, and one is dead, and there is not a word in evidence that anybody connected with the church knew of either one of them.

In Mexico, out of the jurisdiction of the United States, there have been two cases, but taking all the alleged cases together they will not average two in a year since the manifesto was

This shows the record since 1896, when Utah was admitted into the sisterhood of States. I do not know what the record will show as to bigamous marriages in other States. I have not taken pains to inquire, but I do think, considering the people of Utah had been taught the validity of plural marriages, that this record, compiled at so much expense and so much pains by Mr. Owen, shows a very remarkable observance of the law on the part of the people of Utah.

POLYGAMOUS COHABITATION.

Now, a word upon the question which has been suggested by my friend from Idaho [Mr. Dubots] as to violations of the law regarding polygamous cohabitation. Among those who took plural wives previous to 1890-which cases are known as Mormon marriages—there have been without question violations of the law. It was expected at the time Utah was admitted as a State that there would be such violations of the law in individual cases. But it is probable that three-quarters of the men having plural wives stood for the observance of the obligation of the law and withheld from polygamous cohabitation. the other hand, there have been individuals who have not so done. I do not stand here to defend them for a moment. The thing that has shocked this country and helped to arouse it more than anything else was the truthful statement made by the president of the church, Mr. Smith, when on the stand, that he had violated the law in that regard himself—a fact that was not generally known until he himself testified before the com-

The whole country was naturally shocked by the admission.

I was shocked also. But speaking now of the people of Utah as a whole, I am bound to say that it is a most remarkable achievement that polygamous marriages have been stamped out so completely as they seem to have been. It is equally markable that there has been so little of polygamous cohabitation. The change for the better, as Judge McCarty put it, "has been phenomenal." In judging of the situation we have to remember that each one of these plural wives was in her own conscience and in her own mind just as much the wife of her husband as his legal wife could be.

The situation was peculiar and grave. I do not know that it can be better presented than by reading an extract from the speech of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], a non-Mormon, a resident of Salt Lake City, and who is thoroughly informed regarding the conditions there. He said:

Mr. Sutherland. Considering the conditions there. He said:

Mr. Sutherland. Considering this testimony, Mr. President, it must be seen that this situation, which confronted us out in Utah after the manifesto was issued, was one which bristled with difficulties, was one which must be approached from the standpoint of practical statesmanship rather than from the standpoint of the religious reformer. Those men and women who entered into these marriages were not inspired by lust. They were good men; they were pure women. Any man who has lived in the State of Utah, who has mingled with them in their daily life, who has sat at their firesides, and who has talked with them must admit that this is a fact.

Congress had demanded no pledge against polygomous con-

Congress had demanded no pledge against polygamous cohabitation on the part of those who contracted plural marriages prior to 1890, and their relations were by themselves considered pure, wholesome, and God-ordained.

It was supposed by all classes, Mormon and Gentile, that time would banish these conditions and that it was wisdom to let time do the work. Public sentiment was against prosecutions. Judge McCarty testified:

I prosecuted them before the United States commissioners up until 1893, when the United States attorney refused to allow my accounts for services for that kind of work, and then I quit and confined my investigations before the grand jury in those cases.

Mr. Critchlow, who drafted the protest, testified frankly upon this question. He states the situation so clearly that I will ask to have his testimony incorporated in my remarks without reading it at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The testimony referred to is as follows:

mission is granted.

The testimony referred to is as follows:

Mr. Critchlow. I think that in all probability, as near as I can get at my state of mind at that time, it was, that very shortly after the manifesto, under the conditions that existed and that we thought were going to exist, there was no inclination on the part of the prosecuting officers to push these matters as to present cohabitation—I think that is sc—thinking it was a matter that would immediately die out.

Mr. Van Cott. John Henry Smith was there?

Mr. Critchlow. I think so.

Mr. Van Cott. I think so.

Mr. Van Cott. So well known that he was living in unlawful cohabitation?

Mr. Critchlow. That was our understanding of it.

Mr. Van Cott. So well known was this, was it not, to non-Mormons there generally, that where they knew that a prominent Mormon was living in unlawful cohabitation they made no objection to it in the way of protesting to the officers? Is not that true?

Mr. Critchlow. Do you mean the non-Mormons generally?

Mr. Van Cott. I mean the non-Mormons generally.

Mr. Critchlow. Jo you mean the non-Mormons generally?

Mr. Critchlow. I think that is true.

Mr. Van Cott. They were disposed to let things go?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. Van Cott. That was the general feeling?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; I think so.

Senator Overman. When was that?

Mr. Critchlow. During the time of the manifesto, in September, 1890, on down to very recent times; pretty nearly up to date, or practically up to date. Perhaps even now, if I was going to say what was the general inclination—

Senator Overman. The general inclination in Utah is not to prosecute Mr. Smith?

Mr. Critchlow. The general inclination in Utah is not to prosecute Mr. Smith.

Mr. Critchlow. The general inclination in Utah is not to prosecute Mr. Smith.

cute Mr. Smith.

Senator Beyeridge. Then what have you to say, on that point, as showing the great popular indignation?

Mr. Critchlow. There is no inclination on the part of the non-Mormons, and I suppose the Senator refers to non-Mormons, rather than to Mormons—there is no sentiment there in Utah, no great amount of sentiment there in Utah, that would favor putting Joseph F. Smith in the attitude of being persecuted for his religion.

Mr. Van Cott. You speak of the general disinclination to prosecute Mr. Smith at the present time. That is true generally of polygamists who were such before the manifesto, is it not?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; it is so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The position that he took and that taken by others is sustained by the testimony of Judge White-taken by others is sustained by the testimony of Judge White-cotton, of Provo; by Hiram E. Booth, of Salt Lake City; by Arthur Pratt, who was United States marshal for years and years; by Mr. Thomas, a non-Mormon living in Salt Lake; by Glenn Miller, United States marshal; by Mr. John W. Hughes, editor; by Mr. Coulter, and by Mr. Stephens, the latter being secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association at Salt Lake, a man universally esteemed and beloved, who describes the situation in this way:

I meant to say that I think my children would have grown to man-hood knowing little or nothing about these old conditions, except for the fact that it had been a matter of such public notoriety in the newspapers recently. I do not want to be understood as saying that it was not to some extent known.

The conditions in Utah were so quiet that if polygamous cohabitation existed it was in a way that did not attract public As I said before, it was only when Mr. Smith was attention. brought before the committee and made his confession that the country became so thoroughly aroused upon this question. Under the conditions indicated it was thought by everybody upon the ground, Mormons and non-Mormons, that it was better to let the matter die out naturally. Mr. Smoot testified that he was never in any house of President Smith except the house of his legal wife. He was not made an apostle until ten years after the manifesto was issued, and four years after Utah was admitted as a State. He has been no more guilty of laxity in falling to prosecute these cases than every other citizen of prominence in Utah, Mormon or Gentile. The evidence shows how fully the expectation has been realized that these matters would die out.

POLYGAMOUS FAMILIES WILL SOON BE A THING OF THE PAST.

I shall not occupy much more of the time of the Senate, but I must call attention to some very significant figures that have appeared in evidence, showing what the condition in regard to polygamous families has been and is in Utah. It appears from a careful census made in 1890, the year when President Wood-ruff issued his manifesto against further polygamous marriages, that there were 2,451 such families belonging to the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in the United States. In the succeeding nine years this number was so far reduced that in October, 1899, there remained only 1,543 such families. In May, 1902, three years later, a complete and thorough inquiry showed that the original number in 1891 had been reduced 63 per cent, leaving only 897 such families in the United States; and the latest estimate made indicates that, instead of there being 2.451 such families, as there were in 1800, there are not at the present time more than 500 of them remaining, and they are among the old people of Utah. At this rate of decrease polygamous families will soon be a thing of the past, and as plural marriages are now a thing of the past, Utah will occupy the position longed for by Senator Smoot-a State with no elements of polygamous life in being.

A further evidence of the progress in Utah is found in the city of Salt Lake City, the very home of Mormonism, where the temple is located. The testimony of Mr. Hughes, an editor, discloses to what an extent the number of polygamous families has decreased.

Mr. Van Cott. What is the population of Salt Lake City?
Mr. Hughes. It is approximately 70,000 to 75,000.
Mr. Van Cott. Has this investigation lien recent?
Mr. Hughes. About two weeks ago.
Mr. Van Cott. How many polygamists did you find in Salt Lake tty?

City? Mr. Hughes. Seventy-four.

Seventy-four men with plural wives out of a population of seventy or seventy-five thousand people.

Mr. Van Cott. And how many over, say, 60 years of age and under 70?

Mr. Hughes. I think more than fifty of them were over 60.

Seventy polygamists, and a great majority of them are over 60 years of age. How many will there be in ten years from

The present chief justice of the supreme court of Utah, a non-Mormon, speaking of the condition in the whole State, testified:

Mr. MCCARTY. Oh, the change has been phenomenal.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Phenomenal?
Mr. MCCARTY. Yes; phenomenal. There are only a very few. In the little town in which I resided there for over twenty years there were a large number of polygamists. Oh, there must have been in the neighborhood of twenty of them; and I can not call to mind now but three of those old men who are living.
There were have the history of the State of Utah as reflected.

There you have the picture of the State of Utah as reflected by the picture of the town in which the witness resides. Again, in answer to Senator Foraker, Mr. Stephens testified as follows regarding the future of the State:

Senator Foraker. Do you think polygamous cohabitation will entirely pass away with the death of the men who married plural wives before the manifesto?

Mr. Stephens. I do, sir, if there are no more plural marriages. Senator Foraker. What is your judgment as to plural marriages? I understand you to have expressed one, but I want you to express it again.

again.
Mr. Stephens. As to whether there will be more?

Senator Foraker. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. I think they will be just as rare as bigamy among people generally. Oh, I would not say quite as rare as that; very rare. It would be only in the case of an utter fanatic, who would perhaps impose upon the officiating officer in order to get a plural wife. Later, in his testimony, he says:

I think, Senator, that at the time the United States law went into effect there were few polygamous marriages being solemnized, and the feeling of the Mormon people, as a whole, would tend to suppress evidence in a case of polygamy; but now I think the universal sentiment is that no punishment could be too severe for one who went into it.

Further on in his testimony he said:

I would say that there is a far more general disposition to prosecute, and there is no disposition to cover it up or evade or anything of that kind; and I believe the plural marriages that have been solemnized have been done secretly, and perhaps in some other State. I do not know anything about it. I know it would be a foolhardy man who would undertake to let it be known so it could be prosecuted. He would go to the penitentiary very quickly.

ACTION OF THE HIGH CHUBCH AUTHORITIES.

Now, as bearing upon the question whether what has been called the hierarchy is a self-perpetuating body which has entered into a conspiracy to perpetuate the system of polygamy, I desire to call attention to the changes that have been made in that body since 1890. The hierarchy, as it has been called by the protestants, consists of twenty-six persons, the president and his two counselors, making three, called the first presidency; the patriarch, one; twelve apostles, seven first counselors of the seventies, and three presiding bishoprics, making in all twenty-six. In 1890 the polygamists in that body of twenty-six numbered twenty-three. There were only three monogamists. Mark the progress in ten years. In 1900 the polygamists had been reduced from twenty-three to fifteen; the monogamists had increased from three to eleven. At the present time this body contains only nine polygamists, while against these stand seventeen monogamists.

Again, of the fourteen new appointments made to these offices since 1890 twelve have been monogamists and two polyg-

What evidence is found in these figures that this so-called self-perpetuating body is perpetuating itself in a way to re-establish or to uphold polygamous marriages? With polyg-amists disappearing at this rate, this will soon be a body of which not a member will be a polygamist.

Take the body of the apostles. Of the seven apostles chosen since April, 1900, when Reed Smoot was selected, only one was a polygamist, and that was C. W. Penrose, a man 72 years of age, who, as has been stated to-day, had a son 22 years of age when he was elected.

I want to go further than this. Of the ninety-six members of the presidencies of the stakes—the stakes are the subdivisions of the church for business purposes—of the church in 1896, forty-seven, or about one-half, were polygamists. Of 165 such prominent church officials in 1906—the increase in number being due to the organization of additional "stakes" 16, or less than 10 per cent, are polygamists.

In view of these facts and figures, what has to become of the charge against this self-perpetuating hierarchy, that it is in conspiracy to perpetuate polygamy? Every change but one in the board of apostles has been to place men upon it who never had more than one wife, who never accepted even the privilege of taking more than one previous to 1890.

Not only this, but the evidence shows that polygamy as a principle is not taught in schools or in the church or by the It appears further that the missionaries are instructed not to teach polygamy. The elders are under injunction not to teach it, and not a witness was brought from any part of the United States or from any part of the world who could testify that any representative from the church had ever inculcated the principle of polygamy since 1890.

How has it been in the politics of Utah? Two-thirds, probably, of the citizenship are Mormons. Perhaps not more than 60 per cent now. In the first State legislature in 1896 there were forty-three Mormons and only nine polygamists. In the legislature of 1897 there were fifty-three Mormons and only seven polygamists. In the legislature of 1899 there were fifty-three Mormons and nine polygamists. In 1901 there were forty-six Mormons and only three polygamists. In 1903 there were forty-Mormons and only three polygamists. In 1903 there were forty-six Mormons and only three polygamists. In 1905 there were forty-three Mormons and only one polygamist, and in 1907 there is not a polygamist in the body. And yet it is charged that there is a conspiracy on the part of this church to thrust polygamy upon the people.

Not only that, but it has been charged openly in this city within the last two or three days that polygamy will not cease offices ceases. If there is a polygamist holding a Government office in the State of Utah to-day, I wish somebody would tell me who he is. I do not know of a single position of authority under the Government of the United States held to-day by a polygamist.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brandegee in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. Would the Senator class as a polygamist a polygamous wife?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, if you want to bring in such a

Mr. DUBOIS. I asked the simple question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly. Is there one in Utah? Mr. DUBOIS. You have answered my question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Is there one in Utah? I should be glad to know.

Mr. DUBOIS.

Mr. DUBOIS. There is.
Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should be glad to have the Senator tell me, because I do not know.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will tell you sometime.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am sorry— Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am very glad to yield to anyone who will give me information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should be very glad myself to know if the Senator from Idaho has any information upon that subject. I do not know of a single polygamist holding a Federal office in the State of Utah, and I do not believe there is any polygamist holding a Federal office in the State of Utah.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will be very glad to tell the Senator, and I will state in this connection that the polygamists, after the resolution was passed through the Senate, resigned, and gradually they are appointing the wives of those polygamists who Since this investigation commenced a great many polygamists in Idaho I know have resigned their positions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me? Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know nothing about conditions in I do know something about conditions in Utah, and I should like the Senator to state here if he knows either of a polygamous man or a polygamous woman in the State of Utah who is now holding a Federal office. Let us have the name. Let us know about it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I will state the name. I have it not in my pocket. I will state it to the Senator from Utah, and it will result in a removal, as it did when the resolution passed the Senate to investigate the question as to what polygamists were holding offices in Idaho. They resigned. They have appointed the polygamous wives since then. They did not find very many. You pass a resolution and have some agent go out to Utah and I think both in Utah and Wyoming you will find polygamists holding office.
I do not say so, because I do not know. They did in Idaho.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to get into a controversy with the Senator from Idaho in the time of the Senator from Vermont. The Senator from Idaho stated, if I understood him, that after some resolution had been passed the practice of appointing polygamous men to office had ceased and their polygamous wives were being appointed. Did I understand him?

Mr. DUBOIS. I said that had been done. I did not put it so broad as to intimate that it was a practice that had grown up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator said it had been done.

When and who was appointed?

Mr. DUBOIS. I will tell the Senator from Utah who was appointed and the party will be removed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us have the name. Let us have it understood.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am enjoying this. I yield gladly.
Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I shall take the privilege of addressing the Senate again on this question to-morrow, when I will give the name of the party from

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does seem to me that when the Senator from Idaho stands upon the floor of the Senate and says he knows of a case of that kind in the State of Utah, and the request is made here for the name, we ought to have it now. That would seem to be common fairness. I know of no such case in the State of Utah, and I am reasonably well acquainted in that

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Idaho-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Idaho will repeat in the Senate that he is going to give the name, but he will be the judge as to when he will give it. I will do it before the debate closes, I assure the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Idaho, of course, has the right to give or to withhold the name. He has the right to give it now or when he pleases. I think we ought to have it But the Senator may do as he pleases.

POLYGAMY IS AS DEAD AS SLAVERY.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have occupied more time than I have intended in going over the history of the development of the Mormon people since 1890. Had I the time I would be very glad to go into the evidence of non-Mormon witnesses who have appeared before the committee, and who have expressed in the most positive terms their opinion that the progress indicated by the facts which I have stated is going on all the time, and that polygamy as an institution is as dead in Utah to-day as slavery is in our Southern States.

I have before me a minute taken from the testimony of Judge

O. W. Powers:

The younger men and the younger women of the Mormon Church, and I have talked with a great many of them on the subject, are opposed to the practice.

Mrs. Coulter, who was a member of the legislature when Senator Smoot was elected to this body, a graduate of Michigan University, I believe, the wife of a prominent physician in the State of Utah, testified to the same effect.

Former United States Senator McConnell, cf Idaho, says:

The great bulk of Mormons in the counties of our State are opposed the polygamous relation.

Judge Booth, of Utah, says:

Judge Booth, of Utah, says:

I believe polygamy is as dead as slavery. There are several reasons for it. The first is that 98 per cent of the Mormon people are against it. It is inevitable that it must cease to exist. * * * The principal right of the Gentiles has been to do away with polygamous marriages. * * I have among my acquaintances many prominent young Mormons, politicians and others, about my age and younger, and I have heard many of them say, with great emphasis, that if they believed the church sanctioned any plural marriages since the manifesto they would leave the church immediately; that they would not continue as members of the church if the manifesto should be violated by the officers of the church. I believe them to be just as sincere as man can be. I believe that to be the general sentiment of the younger members of the Mormon Church. Polygamy is dead without reference to the law.

It is dead because the people of Utah do not want it reestab-

It is dead because the people of Utah do not want it reestablished any more than our southern brethren want slavery rees-They are glad they are rid of it.

Mr. J. P. Meakin, a public lecturer, says:

I have entered into conversation very much with the people, and I find that they are all very well pleased that polygamy is a thing of the past; and they welcome emancipation from the system. I speak not only for the young Mormons, but for the middle aged. It is a matter of general pleasure or rejoicing that it is being obliterated.

Mr. Hughes, whom I have already quoted as being the editor of a prominent paper, says:

The Mormon people generally are as much against new polygamous marriages as the Gentiles, I believe, as a rule, especially the younger Mormons that I meet. I meet a good many of the younger Mormons, and they are absolutely against it. They would not tolerate it.

Judge Whitecotton testified to the same effect. He said:

The decided sentiment of the Mormon people in Utah is hostile to polygamy. * * All the Mormons—I will speak with reference to them rather than the Gentiles in that regard—are sick and tired and disgusted with polygamy; they want to get rid of it; they want to wipe it out and get it under their feet. * * * I think if it were known in the community in which I live that a man had contracted a polygamous marriage, and the evidence came, there would not be a half a dozen men in that town who would not pursue that man and put him in the penitentiary. That is the sentiment where I live, and the people there are 70 per cent Mormons.

In closing, Mr. President, I wish simply to emphasize the progress made during the three periods to which I have called attention in these remarks. The contests prior to 1890 over the constitutionality of the several acts of Congress adopted for the purpose of stamping out polygamy, both in principle and practice, was sharp and long drawn out. But when the constitutionality of those measures was determined in the courts further opposition ceased, the manifesto was issued, accepted by the church and promulgated, and thereafter the right to solemnize plural marriages ceased to exist in the priesthood, and the right to take plural wives ceased to exist in the church. The property of the church was restored by the Government, amnesty was granted to all, the children of Mormon marriages were legitimated, old political parties were broken up, and Utah started out upon a new era of development in civilization and progress.

During the second period, between 1890 and 1896, the different governors of the Territory unite in certifying to the sincerity of their purpose and the willing obedience to law on the part of the Mormon people. Every objection to statehood had been removed, an enabling act was adopted, and in the last-named year, 1896, Utah was fully admitted into the Union as a State.

During the period of statehood, extending from 1896 to the present time, the history of Utah has been one of progress and development. The attempt to fasten upon the Mormon Church a purpose to reestablish polygamy has utterly failed. A force from within has been in operation and the number of polygamists occupying positions either in church or State has constantly diminished. The legislature of 1896 contained nine polygamists. That of 1907 did not contain one. The so-called "hierarchy," which, in 1890, was composed of twenty-three polygamists and three monogamists, as now constituted contains only nine polygamists, as against seventeen monogamists. Polygamy as a principle is not taught by the church, and its practice is not tolerated by authorities or people.

"Polygamous cohabitation," so called, is fast dying out.
Polygamous families, which in 1890 numbered 2,450, have decreased to about 500, and very soon not one will remain as a reminder of the old conditions.

The people are unalterably opposed to polygamy, and in the language of several witnesses "it is as dead as slavery."

I wish only to add, Mr. President, that this record of progress, revealed so fully in evidence, is to my mind simply marress, revealed so that he evidence, is to my mind simply marvelous, and it seems strange to me that having emancipated themselves from the terrible blight of polygamy and, according to all evidence, being a people who are industrious, frugal, lawabiding, and of good habits, a people who have not interfered offensively in politics since the manifesto, it seems strange to me, I say, that when they support-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Texas?
Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.
Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask the Senator a question for information, because I am not familiar with the testimony upon that point. The Senator just stated that since a certain time the Mormon Church authorities have not attempted to interfere in politics. I understand the testimony is that Senator Smoot himself was not allowed to become a candidate for the position he holds until permission was obtained from the church authorities. I ask him if that is true? As I stated, I am not familiar with the testimony.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If I had the time, I should be very glad to go into that question, but I have already spoken two hours, and I can not take it up in detail. I can explain to the Senator in a very few words just what the position is.

There is a rule that applies to the ecclesinstical authorities of the Mormon Church alone—we will call them the "twentysix "-whose offices I have already been discussing. It simply provides that if they drop their ecclesiastical work to accept an office, to accept any position that takes them from that work—business, politics, or otherwise—they must obtain permission to do it. But if they do not get permission, they can go and do it just the same, only they have to give up their ecclesiastical office and let somebody else take it. In a very few, direct words that explains that situation, and that is all there is to it. This rule is common to every great business house. It prevails in every church. It prevails in the Methodist Church in Utah. Consent is not an indorsement of Mr. Smoot. He is not sent as their representative. It is simply that as he is laying down duties with which he is charged by the church, he has simply to relieve himself of those duties before going into politics or business or anything that would distract his attention.

The same is true, I repeat, of the Methodist Church in Utah.

That organization has a church-extension society, with an agent in that State, and it is in evidence that one of the Methodist preachers employed in its work wanted to go to the legislature, but he could not consent to become a candidate until he secured the consent of his ecclesiastical superior. tor Miller, I believe. What is true of him is true of REED SMOOT, and no more is true of REED SMOOT than of Doctor Miller.

Now, I was saying, for I was about to close, it seems a strange thing to me, in the light of the progress that has been made by the Mormon people since 1890, that the man who back of that time was laying the foundation of this progress, cooperating with the authorities of the United States in bringing to an end a pernicious system, who has always stood for law and order, whose life has been so pure and upright that among all the witnesses testifying in this case not one has brought a charge against him either in his business or social life-it seems strange to me, I say, that the people of that State should be punished by denying to such a representative of that people and of that progress a seat in the United States Senate. If there is any reason for denying him a seat, I have not discovered it.

It has been painful to me in some respects to speak upon this subject. I know what public sentiment has been created. But I know that the people of the United States are intelligent and all they want to ascertain is the truth, and when they know what the truth is they will stand by the man who declares it. So I stand here to say that upon my oath of office as a Senator of the United States, having listened to this vast volume of testimony, having examined it in detail since that ime, having given it my most mature consideration, I fail to find any reason why I should vote to deprive Senator SMOOT of the right to occupy the seat to which he has been elected.

During the delivery of Mr. Dillingham's speech,
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont will kindly suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar 26, Senate resolution 214, by Mr. CARTER.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. DILLINGHAM's speech,

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let us proceed with the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the comsideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment on page 39 striking out lines 3 to 16 was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]. The amendment was proposed because the language to be stricken out is the existing law. In the last appropriation bill there is this provision:

That 10 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the objection I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. The next amendment was passed over. It begins in line 18 and ends in line 22 on page 39; and I move that it be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was disagreed to. The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 22, page 39, it is proposed to insert the word "hereafter;" so as to read:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests of the United States.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is a provision which has been in past bills, and was drawn, I believe, by the Member from South Dakota. I have no feeling about the word "hereafter," but it was inserted to prevent useless repetition in other bills. I supposed it was a matter about which there was no question. If there is objection to it, I will ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. CARTER. There is a question about it. I will explain it so that the chairman of the committee will understand.

It has been a policy almost universally adhered to that in these States the timber should not be sawed into lumber and exported to other States, because in due course of time an equal quantity of lumber would of necessity be required for shipment back to the State. That policy has been indulged from year to year, but we do not believe it should become a matter of settled law that lumber may be shipped indefinitely from Colorado into Kansas, if it becomes evident hereafter that it is desirable to keep it in Colorado. There is not a sufficient amount of timber in the State of Colorado to permanently supply that State. Therefore for whatsoever quantity of lumber is shipped out from Colorado now an equal quantity will in the future have to be shipped back.

I have no objection to this clause being allowed to remain in the law from year to year by sufferance, but the word "hereafter" would make it a permanent law, and for that reason I object to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. This provision was changed in the last appropriation bill. In the appropriation bill prior to that I had the State of Idaho excepted from this provision of the bill. At the last session I was not able to be present because of illness, and the exception in favor of the State of Idaho was stricken out, so that on line 25, where the Black Hills National Forest Reserve is excepted from the provisions of the act allowing lumber to be shipped to other States, the words "and the State of Idaho" were stricken out. Now, I think I may fairly ask of the Senate at the proper time that they be restored to the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. That would be in order. Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to ca Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted to call attention to it at this time, because the word "hereafter" is a very comprehensive word and would give an element of permanency to this provision which I do not desire to see incorporated in it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the Senator objects to the word "hereafter."

Mr. HEYBURN.

PROCTOR. Let the amendment be disagreed to, Mr.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what reason there was for giving this discretionary power to the Secretary of Agriculture to interdict the shipment of timber out of any State into another State. Why was that done? What is the theory upon which this power to interdict commerce in any particular matter is conferred upon one of the Secretaries? This is the language of the paragraph to which I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests of the United States, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska, in which said forests are respectively situated.

That is the clear power and authority given to the Secretary of Agriculture to allow the shipping of lumber or not as he sees fit. I can not understand why such power should be given. Mr. PROCTOR. I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] can explain it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should be very glad to have an explanation.

Mr. CARTER. At this moment I am not prepared to cite the Senator from Colorado to the statute upon the subject, but I am quite satisfied that the existing law prohibits the shipping of lumber cut from timber on the public domain from one State to another. This provision is for the purpose of temporarily permitting that traffic to proceed. It will be recalled that many

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator from Montana were it not for this paragraph would there be any interdiction at all of the transportation of timber from one State to another?

Mr. CARTER. There would be as to timber cut on the public domain, not upon private holdings. The law at present prohibits the timber or the products of timber cut on the public domain from being shipped from one State to another. Originally that statute was based upon an effort, I think, put forth by the then Speaker of the House of Representatives, perchance the floor leader of the House, Mr. Blaine, during the Administration of President Hayes. It will be recalled that under the administration of Secretary Schurz, of the Interior Department, all cutting of timber on the public domain for mining and other purposes in the West was absolutely prohibited. A law was passed by Congress permitting the cutting of timber on mineral lands for mining and milling purposes, but prohibiting the transportation of that timber from one State to another. It is for the purpose of permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to allow the shipment to be made from forest reserves that this particular provision is inserted, I am quite well satisfied.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am frank to say that I never knew the provision the Senator from Montana suggests was in the law, and I would be pleased in the course of a little while to have the Senator point me to the provision to which he refers.

Mr. CARTER. I have sent out to procure a reference to the statute, and I will have it in the course of a little time.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that from forest reserves no timber can be cut except by permission of the Bureau-probably the head of division or some of his agents or officers to enter into contracts upon that subject. I, for the life of me, can not understand why, if the Secretary of Agriculture, either direct or through his officials, permits timber to be cut from the forest reserves, he should have it in his power to put a stop to the use of that timber as an article of commerce; why he should have it in his power to say that timber severed from the public domain, that becomes an article of commerce immediately upon its being severed, shall not be taken out of the State, or, out of good will, to say you may take it out of the State.

I think, Mr. President, it is almost an indefensible proposition. Yet as it has existed for a long while, as is stated by the Senator from Montana, I will not at this time make any motion upon the subject.

Mr. PROCTOR. The second amendment on page 40, in regard to conducting experiments in certain cases in the city of Washington and elsewhere, was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. That is a provision which is necessary under the rulings of the Comptroller. A similar provision has been inserted in a great many previous bills, and, I think, several times in this bill. No help can be employed here unless it is specifically provided for.

Mr. CARTER. The only feature of the amendment challenging my attention rests in this: That it seems to be broad enough to establish a testing plant and a general establishment here, destined in the future to become quite an expensive plant, for the testing of timber, for instance, for testing textile strength, for testing the crushing power, and making those tests which architects are generally called upon to make when timber is submitted for the construction of a building.

I doubt if it is any part or portion of the province of the Government to engage in that class of experiments. It is generally done by private enterprise to better satisfaction than the Government could possibly conduct the investigations.

This may be intended only for experimental work in the planting of trees. If so, the amendment is entirely proper, although I am at a loss to know how the planting of trees or tree culture in the District of Columbia could cast any special light upon the propagation of tree life in the arid regions of the

The tendency is to create particular establishments in the city of Washington, which naturally grow, and when once established require great and constantly increasing appropriations. I think elsewhere, upon a recent occasion, but $100,000 was appropriated to start a gun factory down on the Potomac River somewhere. Some one wise enough to look forward predicted that that gun factory would ultimately cost about $7,000,000 and that the appropriation of $100,000 was but the entering wedge.

I have no objection to investigations being conducted in the District of Columbia, as provided in lines 22, 23, and 24 on page 40, but I can not perceive the necessity for conducting experiments in forestry on Puget Sound, and in the Rocky Mountains, and the Sierra Nevada by the planting of trees in the humid atmosphere of the District of Columbia. It does seem to me to be unnecessary, and I think it challenges attention sufficiently at least to merit observation here.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, there was precisely the same provision in the bill of last year. It is not necessary to expend any money here; I am not aware of any great work of the Forestry Bureau in the way of investigation or experiments going on here; but it is sometimes necessary to conduct some matter of minor importance here, and if this were stricken out it would positively forbid it. I think it is a very reasonable proposition, and I do not think it has been objected to hitherto.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the same thing struck me, in reading this provision, that the Senator from Montana referred to. In dealing with this subject, purely local, applicable to the great western country, and which is a matter of practical detail, I do not see any reason why we should authorize experiments to be tried here in the city of ington. We might just as well establish a laboratory to try experiments in articles of commerce, and illustrative experiments in every Department of the Government. If we give the proper money and continue the establishment of this forestry feature of the Administration, I certainly for one do not see any necessity of this clause, and I shall hope that it will be stricken out.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, very often some slight experiment or investigation is called for that can be carried on here very much cheaper than to send experts to some distant part of the country. So far as I am acquainted, there never has been anything of any consequence of the kind carried on here by the Bureau of Forestry. I have no idea that it is con-templated to do anything of the kind. I know that the provision has been in former bills, and it has never been objected to;

and I have never heard complaint of any abuse of it.

Mr. HALE. Of course the Senator understands that happily the Senate this year is devoting more time to the scrutiny of appropriation bills.

Mr. PROCTOR. Especially this one.

Mr. HALE. Not especially this one. There was considerable time taken, and taken to some purpose, on the Indian appropriation bill; there was a good deal of time taken on the Army appropriation bill, and there has been considerable time taken on this bill, and to some purpose. Because we have allowed in a lax way heretofore appropriations to be made and clauses to be inserted and passed carelessly, it is no good reason we should now, when we are scrutinizing the bills, let it go.

I do not think that this provision is at all essential to the Forestry Bureau. It seems to me that it would be much better to have it go out and not set up a bureau establishing experiments in Washington.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to investigate it a little more. I presume this is not a matter that will take any lengthy time, and I ask to have the amendment passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before it is passed over, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont if he has any knowledge as to the number of so-called "scientists" now employed in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. PROCTOR. The reports show the name of every man and his salary. The law requires of the Agricultural Department what is not required of any other Department, a full report of every cent of its expenditures and of every man employed and his salary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that fact. That is in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes; it is reported every year. It has been so for the last two years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would be very glad to look it over.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no such provision in regard to any other Department, but in regard to the Department of Agriculture every item of expense must be reported in detail.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have noticed in reading some of the bulletins of the Department of Agriculture essays by men who call themselves experts or scientists that are of about as much value to the average farmer written in English as they would be if they were written in Sanskrit; and I have wondered whether there was not a superabundance of those men there who wanted something to do.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Vermont is quite right in saying reports of this Department contain lists of all the employees. If the Senator from New Hampshire, or any Senator interested, will look at this report he will find that from page 199 to page 222, embracing some hundreds of employees of this Bureau, the name of each one is given, amounting to several hundred. have not added them up.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Ver-ont a question. I have been told, upon what I believe to be mont a question. competent authority, that there have been sixteen hundred and some odd special employees, scientists, and other people of that character added to the list in the Agricultural Department since the assembling of the present session of Congress-1,656 I think is the exact number. They are partly inspectors, but they have been added, I think, all along the line. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he knows anything about that?

Mr. PROCTOR. To carry out the provisions of the meatinspection law I know that a very large number has been added. They come through the civil service regularly. I do not know of any other branch that has called for any number.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can the Senator give us the number who have been appointed as inspectors?

Mr. PROCTOR. I can not, but I doubt if there are any more than will be required. I know I have heard complaint that it was difficult to get them fast enough to carry out that law. They all come through the civil service.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any limit anywhere in the pending bill to the number of persons who may be employed at the dis-cretion of the Secretary of Agriculture in this vast number of these experimental matters:

Mr. PROCTOR. Does the Senator refer to meat inspection?
Mr. ALDRICH. I refer to the large number of investigations carried on and for which lump sums are appropriated. I should like to ask if there is any limit in the bill anywhere upon the number of men who may be employed?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not know of any limit except by the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have some figures in connection with the subject immediately under consideration that would be appropriate. I find from an examination of the bill under consideration that we have provided for 141 employees at Washington specifically; that that number comprises 1 Forester, 109 clerks, 10 draftsmen, 1 artist, 2 photographers, 12 messengers, 2 carpenters, 3 watchmen, and 1 electrician. We have appropriated already $143,200 for those employees at Washington. The provision immediately under consideration Washington. The provision immediately under consideration appropriates $756,800 in addition to that; and within the second item is included those who will be engaged in making these experiments in Washington. So these experiments will be made outside of the 141 employees who have already been provided for in the first provision relating to the Forest Service in the bill. Just what proportion of the seven hundred and odd thousand dollars is to be used for carrying on these experiments does not appear either from the bill itself or from any report made by the Secretary of Agriculture or by the committee, so far as I can learn.

It seems to me that this item of seven hundred and odd thousand dollars demands very close scrutiny, because it only on its face designates a very limited number of purposes to which it is to be applied. So I think we may as well pause over this $700,000 item and ascertain to our own satisfaction the necessity for making the appropriation, in view of the fact that there is now in the Treasury available in this special fund a very large sum of money not accounted for or not considered by Congress in making provision for the maintenance of this Department.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, one of the objections I suggest to this clause, in line 22 to line 24, rests in the unlimited authority it gives to the Director of the Bureau or the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations in the city of Washington or elsewhere. It will be observed that it does not confine the work to experiments, but to investigations in Washington or elsewhere. That will permit sending men all over the globe for any purpose that may appear to the Secretary of Agriculture or the Chief Forester as entirely in harmony with the interests of that Bureau.

There should be, I think, for traveling expenses in all these bills some specified sum. I have observed large numbers of Government employees who have traveled across the continent in the Forestry Service, in the Irrigation Service, attending all sorts of conventions, at the public expense and without accounting to anybody, as far as I know, for the character of the expenses incurred.

Now, it does seem to me that when we leave an appropriation in such a condition that an officer of a bureau or the head of a Department is permitted at the public expense to submerge a convention of the people assembled for the purpose of consulting one with another on the public interest, the time has come to fix some limitation on the expenditure of public money in that direction.

I do not pretend to venture the opinion that these public agents paid by the Government, traveling at the expense of the Government, are not doing a wholesome and a useful work. It is certainly an agreeable work. There is no limit on the expense they may incur. Unless Congress shall resume its legitimate function and place some limitation, this evil will grow until no convention of the people can assemble anywhere in the country without a great swarm of Government agents coming forward at the Government expense to tell them what it is best to do and how to do it.

I do not believe there should be permission given to any officer to conduct investigations in the city of Washington or elsewhere, which means the North Pole or the Southern Cross or any other part of the globe to which a human being can go. There should be a limitation, and I think that portion at least of the provision should be stricken out.

Mr. PROCTOR rose.
Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Vermont, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana to what conventions he refers, to political conventions, or conventions of people of the Western States on matters relating to irrigation or forest reserves, grazing, and other matters of common interest of that kind?

Mr. CARTER. I have not observed any very keen discrimination in that particular. I have observed these people, at the Government expense, attending sessions of the legislatures in the respective States; I have observed them attending the po-litical conventions of the respective parties; I have observed their presence at irrigation congresses and meetings; I have observed them at the meetings of stock growers, at meetings of all kinds and characters assembled in the western country for the last five years. I do not recall an assemblage of people congregated after notice for the purpose of discussing the public welfare or enacting laws that was not attended by some-body at the expense of the Government of the United States, and generally with some sort of an ax to grind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do. Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Montana, that if it is the custom of these officials to attend political conventions, I certainly will join with him in the condemnation of any such practice. Such practice has never come within my observation. Of course, I do not contend against the Senator's experience if he has had personal experience in that direction.

I wish to say, however, regarding these great popular conventions of the West, relating to their economic condition, that they have had a great educational effect in that region. Take the irrigation congress, for instance. It is composed usually of about a thousand men, selected from the States and Territories constituting the arid and semiarid regions. They meet for the purpose of discussing economic questions relating to their region—the question of irrigation, the question of national irrigation, and the question of State cooperation in national irrigation, the question of the uniformity of laws amongst themselves with a view to their common betterment. At such conventions it has been the custom of the Reclamation Service and the Forestry Service to summon together at the same time their leading officials in positions of responsibility in the West. It has not been their custom to participate in the conventions themselves. Each service has had a congress of its own, intended to produce an exchange of views amongst its members, an exchange of experience, so that the entire service can become familiar with the general plans of the service in the West.

In that connection it is customary for them to have their plans and their maps and to deliver lectures and expositions. They have been in that way a great educational force in the West, and I think it is the universal sentiment of the members attending these conventions that they have been of great instruction and of great use to the West in its development.

So also with reference to the associations of cattle growers, cattle raisers, and sheep raisers. Those men graze their berds and flocks on the great public domain. The public domain is subject to the common use of all, and being subject to that common use means that the domain necessarily runs the risk of being overstocked to the injury of the country and to the injury of the sheep raisers and cattle raisers themselves. So these officials go to such associations and make expositions of their work and endeavor to bring their work into general harmony with the interests and the sentiments of the West. It seems to me they perform a great public service.

At first the entire West was in a position of antagonism to both of these services, fearing the National Government would intrude itself upon the domestic concerns to the exclusion of the The result of this communication between these great services of the Government and the people of those regions conducted in this way, the proceedings being published throughout the entire West, is that we have been able to secure harmony of action. It has been essential in many instances to pass State laws in aid of national laws and to bring the two services, the State service and the national service, into harmony of relation.

I quite agree with the Senator that if these traveling expenses are incurred there ought to be a special fund and that there ought to be a limitation. I do not believe that we should give this service a free hand. All I do contend is that the service would be absolutely worthless if the conventions of officials were confined to Washington; that they are doing a practical and beneficent work to the whole country by mingling with the people of the West and associating with them in their congresses and their associations and bringing to them a realizing view of the beneficence of the work that they have in I think that work should be encouraged and not dis-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to reply briefly to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that the result of the attendance of the officials of the Forestry Service of the Government upon irrigation congresses and other assemblies in the West has been to bring them into harmony. I ask leave to read the resolution adopted by the legislature of Idaho on yesterday, which I have in my hand. announcing it, referring to this resolution, reads: The telegram

Boise, Idaho, February 19, 1997.

Senator W. B. HEYBURN. United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C..

Don't permit our telegram for Judge Ailshie as second choice to interfere with Dietrich chance of appointment. Dietrich is our choice all the time. We passed Gleason forest reserve resolution in house to-day, and by plain talk indersed your fight for Idaho people's rights.

J. W. WEBESTER.
P. G. JOHNSTON.

The resolution, which was passed by the legislature, reads:

Be it resolved by the legislature of the State of Idaho, That the forest-reserve policy of the General Government as ministered is detrimental to the interests of the State of Idaho, in that it has resulted in a practical transfer of jurisdiction over more than one-third of the State to a bureau of the General Government, which has substituted rules and regulations inconsistent with the legal rights of the citizens of the State under the general laws by which the State is presumed to be governed;

That it has included within its boundaries more than 1,000,000 acres of land belonging absolutely to the State of Idaho, granted to the State by Congress under the admission act, which said act and the constitution of the State provide the sole means of disposal;

That the grant of sections 16 and 36 was for the exclusive use of public schools;

That while Congress has provided for homestead entries within forest reserves under burdensome and impractical conditions, the State can not hope for a substantial growth under such conditions, as no people would care to make their homes in a section of the country subject to such limitations and restrictions as will naturally prevent the growth of communities large enough to bring schools, churches, and other institutions incident to community life;

That contrary to the best interests of the State and the people the mineral lands are included within the forest reserves, and while theoretically they are open to prospecting, the limitations of the forest-reserve rules are such as to render it practically impossible to secure an investment of sufficient capital to develop mining claims after the prospector has found them, and capital will not, except in rare cases, invest in mining claims or locations within the forest reserves, as they prefer to operate under well-defined legal rights rather than permissions and privileges dependent upon the pleasure of departmental forces;

That we favor the amendment of laws where they are found to be forces;

That we favor the amendment of laws where they are found to be defective rather than a suspension of them, which means people's rights to be suspended at the will and pleasure of a departmental agent; and That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

That is the harmony that has been brought about by the presentation of the views and methods of the Forestry Service of the United States. I say that at this time, in reply to the Senator from Nevada, that the system and those representing it have been instrumental in bringing about a harmony of views between the national policy and the States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do.
Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Idaho certainly shows the great difference of view between the legislature of Idaho and the Forestry Service regarding the administration of the forestry laws; but that has nothing to do with the question I was discussing. I think the Senator from Idaho will agree with me that if such a spirit of dissatisfaction exists in his own State, it would be a wise thing for the officials of the Forestry Department to go out to the State of Idaho and acquaint themselves with the feeling there.

Mr. HEYBURN. With the Senator's permission, I should like to interrupt him there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada

yleld to the Senator from Idaho?
Mr. NEWLANDS, Certainly,
Mr. HEYBURN, The Senator may or may not be aware of the fact that at the meeting of the National Irrigation Congress, which was held in the city of Boise, the capital of the State of Idaho, during the past season, the Forestry Service was represented there in very large numbers, sufficient to create disorder in the meeting and to attempt to interfere with the proceedings of the meeting. I will not go further, because there are those present on the floor who will recall vividly the scene when I, being a member of that convention, undertook to discuss the forest-reserve laws in the convention.

If I am accurately informed—and I believe I am—a number of these forest rangers and employees had been brought there and placed in a body in that meeting, as I believe for the avowed purpose of interrupting its proceedings should I presume to express my views there. Then the Senator will understand that the Service has already presented itself to the people of Idaho and its methods, and that they have been condemned by the resolution which I have just read, which is not a sud-den inspiration, but is the result of several years of harassments and embarrassments under the application of this system, which has selzed upon that State in its infancy and has prostrated it, stayed the hand of progress, and threatens to create and build up, by the very provisions of this bill we are now considering, a permanent establishment in Idaho, with telephone systems and a system of public roads, for whose use? For the use of the foresters. If the forest reserve is to be permanent, the public have no interest in the roads that traverse it.

They took forcible possession of roads that cost the State of Idaho $180,000 to construct, and when you pass over those roads to-day you do it by the grace of a forest officer, and under the rules and limitations of the Department. It is proposed now that we shall expend $750,000, as provided by the section under consideration, plus a million dollars, as provided in the succeeding paragraph in this bill, for the purpose of making permanent that which it is our determination to wrest ourselves from.

It can not be wondered at that those who understand conditions in the State have expressed by this resolution that we should make a stubborn resistance here against any further legislation that would fasten upon us this blight.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not intend to take issue with the Senator from Idaho as to the conditions in his own State, for I am not familiar with those conditions. Whilst I have attended most of the irrigation congresses that have been held during the past twelve years, I did not attend the one at Boise City. If, as the Senator says, the Forestry Service organized a lot of men and took them there to participate in the deliberations of that congress and not, as heretofore, to act simply in an educational way on the outside, and if, as the result of that intrusion upon the deliberations of that congress, a discourtesy was committed upon the Senator from Idaho, I am sure I will join him in every word of reproof that he can utter re-

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me finish my sentence, please. I will conclude in a few moments. All I can say is this, that within my experience the action of the Reclamation Service and the Forestry Service has not been intrusive; that it has been simply suggestive, educational, and instructive, and in that way they have done a great work. If the Forestry Service has been guilty of the things to which the Senator refers, it seems to me that complaint ought to be made to the President, complaint ought to be made to the Secretary of Agriculture, and that kind of intrusion remedied. I am only talking about the educational and instructive work which thus far they have done.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator-

yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me just a moment further, because I do not intend to hold the floor very

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to ask, instructive to whom? Mr. NEWLANDS. Outside of the intrusion of which the Senator complains upon the deliberations of that congress; I should think it was a very good thing to have the members of the Forestry Service there. I think it is a good thing that the members of the Forestry Service are brought everywhere through the West in contact with the public sentiment, and if the public sentiment of the Senator's State and of that con-gress was adverse to their action, I am sure it would be instructive and influential to that Service in the future. I think it is a great deal better for these men to be in the West, moving about there in actual contact with the problems which they have to solve, rather than to establish a mere bureaucracy 3,000 miles away from the work that is to be accomplished. It is only for that that I stand, and I suggest in that connection that it is absolutely essential that traveling expenses should be paid.

As to the abuses to which the Senator refers, I have nothing to say. I am not informed in regard to them beyond what the Senator says. But, assuming that his statement is correct-and I have no doubt that it is, or he would not make itit seems to me it was a grave offense, which should be brought to the attention of the President and the Secretary of Agricul-I can not believe, Mr. President, that misconduct upon the part of the members of any service under the United States Government will be sustained by such men as the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I was present at the Boise congress, to which reference has been made, and I wish to bear cheerful testimony to the uniform consideration manifested by the Forestry Service for that convention and its membership. That certain controversies arose there was probably not to the detriment of the public service.

I have no objection to urge against the Chief Forester or such person as he may designate going anywhere for the purpose of diffusing knowledge among the people, but I do object to leaving the aggregate sum of $1,900,000 open and unprotected, to be spent in traveling expenses, by that or any other officer at his own sweet will. There is no officer so wise as to be entirely worthy of such mighty confidence as this bill reposes in one man of limited experience.

In connection with a matter hereinafter to be referred to shortly, I have the statement of the Chief Forester to the effect that, desiring to get charge of the public grazing lands, he went hence to New York, from New York to Salt Lake, where he had seventeen of these forest supervisors gathered round about to assist in herding a little convention of stockmen there assembled. From there he proceeded to Denver, in the State of Colorado, where another bunch of citizens were assembled in convention, and there he was joined by eighteen other forest super visors, with expenses and salary and hotel bills paid by the Government of the United States. The result was a certain sort of neutral expression of those people concerning certain public questions involved in extending to the forest supervisors supreme dominion over the whole public domain of the United

Mr. President, it is as to that lavish, unrestrained expenditure of the public money by, any officer that I raise my voice, and, in doing so, be it understood that I in no manner, form, or sense reflect upon the integrity nor the lofty purpose of any officer of the Government. As a principle of legislation and a matter of wise and judicious and patriotic administration, it must be taken for granted that the men who framed this Government, in placing the right in Congress to appropriate the public money from Treasury, were warranted in that reservation by good, ad sense. When an appropriation passes this body and the sound sense. other branch of Congress it must pass the scrutiny of some 400 odd persons. It must pass the ordeal of committee and scrutiny in both branches of Congress, and it is safe to assume that when bills have been scrutinized in that manner the expenditure is presumably fairly justified.

But what may be said of the Congress appropriating substantially $2,000,000 and leaving $1,250,000, in addition, to be disposed of in a star-chamber proceeding by one individual? Congress has nothing to say about the salaries to be fixed or the number of persons to be employed. The only limitation that the chairman of the committee has suggested is the aggregate amount of the appropriation. The Forester and the Secretary of Agriculture may make salaries at $10,000 a year, $100 a month, $150 a month, or whatsoever they please. With that a month, $150 a month, or whatsoever they please. this Congress has naught to do, and it supinely refuses to exercise its ordinary authority and perform its duty in leaving this vast sum thus unguarded in any manner or form.

I have never met a man in the public service, I have never known a pair of men in the public service with whom I would trust this great administrative power more cheerfully or confidently than I would to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief Forester; but, Mr. President, the theory of the whole matter is inherently and radically wrong and involves an abdication by Congress of a function and the refusal to perform a duty.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to make an observation. I came in just as the Senator from Montana was alluding to the presence of the Forester and his assistants at the live stock association meetings at Salt Lake City and Denver.

Mr. CARTER. I only made an incidental reference to it. Mr. WARREN. I assume that the Senator will do the Secretary of Agriculture and the Forester the justice to admit that in all those cases they merely acceded to urgent invitations extended by the associations.

Mr. CARTER. That is, to come in person and bring seventeen forest supervisors in one case and eighteen in the other?

Mr. WARREN. To come in person, so far as the Secretary and the Forester were concerned. I assume when the Senator says that the Forester brought seventeen or eighteen persons he does not mean to indicate that he took those from Washington or from any other point except the forest reservations near the places where the Forester visited. He brings them in to the nearest common center for consultation regarding future work as well as for reports upon the work already done. I understand—and I have attended many of these meetings—they have nothing to do with lobbying or asking appropriations. But the Forester himself was asked to come before the bodies and, if you may put it that way, to defend the policy. As proof that he must either have come in that way or been unsuccessful in his endeavors, I placed in the Recond a few days ago resolutions passed by the National Wool Growers' Association at Salt Lake City, in which the association mildly criticises the Forester for excessive charges for grazing. But in all those cases-I want to be just, and know the Senator does-these officials only responded to urgent invitations from the associations

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. President, I think it entirely proper for the Chief Forester to respond to an invitation extended by representative citizens or bodies of citizens anywhere, but I believe that the Congress should not provide the expense of travel and hotel expenses and all the expenses incident to and attendant upon such meetings of a large number of other persons employed by the Government and assembled there without invitation. If that proposition were up here to-day, I imagine there would be some question raised as to the necessity of so many assembling at a given point for a purpose entirely alien to the forest reservations, because in both cases the Chief Forester was present for the purpose of securing support to his proposition to entitle him to the privilege of leasing the public domain.
Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CARTER. I yield

Mr. WARREN. I do not think that quite tallies with the actual occurrences.

Mr. CARTER. I have a statement here which I will later

Mr. WARREN. I have yet to see the charges made by the Forester in going to any one of these meetings, except where it was connected with his regular visits to the various reservations or localities. I think the Senator would find upon investigation that the meeting of seventeen or eighteen, or whatever the number of other persons was, had really nothing to do with the association meeting, other than to meet at that point with the Forester and talk over matters of administration.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President— Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask both the Senators a question-whether these associations which are now being referred to are the same associations that advocated this legislation on the agricultural bill?

Mr. CARTER. The delegates from these associations were the same persons who appeared here to advocate this legislation.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator from Montana says, there were delegates from there and also delegates from associations other than those which the Senator has mentioned.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply rise to state that, so far as the foresters of the State of Utah are concerned, they were invited to the congress referred to by Mr. Pinchot to meet him for the purpose of discussing the administration of forest reserves in the State of Utah. They made a report to him and talked the matter over with him as to what should be the future policy as to the administration of the forest reserves in Utah. They had no whatever in the convention and no voice there. They simply, to save expense, met there with the Forester at that time, as was convenient for him to meet them, in order not to make a special trip to the West for the purpose of meeting him.

I have attended several of those meetings where Mr. Pinchot and the foresters have met together for consultation. I know the results of those conferences are good, and they have been for the betterment of the Service so far as the forest reserves are concerned.

I wished simply to state that much, so far as the seventeen foresters who were invited to Salt Lake City are concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment at the bottom of page 40.

Mr. HALE. What amendment is that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 40, line 22, after the word "foresters," it is proposed to insert:

And in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary. The amendments of the committee on page 41 have already been agreed to. The next amendment is, on page 42, lines 2 and 3, to strike out "five hundred thousand" and insert "one million;" so as to read:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agricfiture may direct, for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inc ment on page 41, line 13, was agreed to. I should like to inquire when the amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to yesterday.
Mr. HEYBURN. That is the amendment which carries the appropriation. That would raise the whole question.

Mr. CARTER. It will be raised later—on page 42, line 15.
Mr. HEYBURN. I desire at another time to reopen the consideration of that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next

The Secretary. On page 42, line 6, after the word "forests," it is proposed to insert "$250,000 of which amount is to be immediately available."

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as the amount has been re duced, at least the committee amendment was negatived, it seems to me this sum ought to be reduced, if the clause is left in the bill at all,

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me fair and reasonable, if the appropriation is to stand at $500,000, that some part of it should be made available for immediate use. Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "two hundred and fifty" and inserting "one hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. PROCTOR. That is agreeable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to read "$125,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I reserve the right to reopen that question when the bill comes into the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right. The next amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 42, line 7, it is proposed to strike

That hereafter a detailed estimate of the services herein appropriated for shall be submitted to Congress with the other estimates for the Department of Agriculture.

And insert:

That hereafter detailed reports of all expenditures under this appropriation, during each calendar year, shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of February

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the first amendment, striking out, be agreed to, and that the second, the insertion, be disagreed to; and I submit the amendment which I offered yesterday as a substitute. It has been printed.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read. Mr. ALDRICH. The motion of the Senator from Vermont is somewhat complicated, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands his suggestion to be equivalent to disagreeing to the amendment to insert, and then the Senator moves to strike out the House provision and to insert in lieu thereof what he has sent to the desk.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the part to be added could be added, and then the motion could be put as a whole to strike out and insert. That is the effect of what the Senator proposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to agree to the first amendment to Mr. PROCIOR. I move to disagree to the second amendment, which was to insert, which leaves nothing—
Mr. ALDRICH. That is not the parliamentary form. But still the Chair has the purpose in mind.

Mr. PROCTOR. That leaves nothing; and then I propose to insert this amendment as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the effect of the motion of the Senator from Vermont is to strike out the portion proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and to strike out the committee amendment inserting, and to insert in lieu of both what the Senator has sent to the desk. Without objection, the committee amendment striking out is agreed to. and the committee amendment inserting is disagreed to. Secretary will state the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Vermont.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee in the bill, insert, after the word "Provided," the following:

That hereafter on or before the 1st day of January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress detailed estimates of all expenditures intended for this service for the next fiscal year and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. That is a very satisfactory amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. There is a defect in that amendment. In requiring a detailed account of expenditures it should also require a detailed account of expenditures from the income derived from the forest reserves.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is a separate amendment. I understood that the one offered by the Senator from Vermont had been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LODGE. On the matter of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont it seems to me the point made by the Senator from Minnesota is correct.

Mr. NELSON. It ought to be included.
Mr. LODGE. It is confined, as it now reads, to the money appropriated and does not cover the money expended from the fund derived from rentals and sales of timber.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have an amendment covering that. Mr. LODGE. If the Senator has an amendment covering that, all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be agreed to. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The Secretary, After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That all money heretofore or hereafter received by or on account of the Forest Service for timber or from any other source of forest reservation revenue, except sums heretofore expended from said fund, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like very much to examine the amendment, and I will bring it up later. It may be all right, but I should like to look at it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be passed over for the present.

Mr. FULTON. There is a question I should like to ask of the proposer of this amendment. Will it prohibit the States and counties from receiving the 10 per cent now authorized by law? Provision ought to be made in the amendment for that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I overlooked that provision. There is a provision that 10 per cent shall go to the States?

Mr. FULTON. Yes. I suggest that the amendment go over.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This provision on page 39 of the bill has been stricken out.

The law as it now stands provides that each Mr. WARREN. year there shall be that amount-10 per cent of the total earnings of the forest reserves-paid to the States or, in fact, to the several counties for public schools and the building of The reason why it was stricken out in this bill is because it was thought unnecessary to repeat what is already the Now, the Senator wants to be careful that we do not interfere with that 10 per cent.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We can do it right here in a minute by simply modifying the amendment so as to say that it shall not interfere with this provision of law.

Mr. HALE. Or, what is still better, the Senator can provide that the 10 per cent to the States shall be paid to them by the

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is so paid now.

Mr. WARREN. It is so paid now, but you have to provide how, if it all is to go into the Treasury.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Indiana that his purpose can be accomplished without affecting this fund. It would be desirable to have a special fund in the Treasury to be called the "forest-reserve fund," but to provide that no money shall be paid out of that fund except upon specific appropriation. I think it would be very much more satisfactory in that shape.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I see no reason why it should be designated as the "forest-reserve fund." It is a fund that is derived from the sale of timber off our public lands and from rentals for the use of grazing lands. It has nothing whatever to do with the purposes of a forest reserve.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that these receipts are not by way of revenue to the United States. The purpose is not to collect these moneys as a part of the revenue of the United States and apply them to general expenditures. The purpose is simply to collect such moneys as will enable the Forestry Service to be self-supporting.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In my judgment that is all a mistaken ea. We never intended that the forest reserves should be selfsupporting. The forest reserves were created for a separate purpose altogether, and it is a new notion, a recent notion, that we should go into the speculating business with forest reserves. Of course, as to the income from forest reserves, the Forester can make it ten million or twenty million or thirty million dollars, if he sees fit, depending upon the amount of timber he sells from the public lands. In regard to the idea that they shall be self-supporting, I will say that of course there are mil-lions of dollars' worth of timber on the forest reserves that may be sold to make the service supporting. My idea was to cover into the Treasury all moneys received from the sale of timber on our public lands, and to appropriate out of the Treasury a sufficient sum of money to administer the forest reserves, Congress at all times keeping in touch with the amount of money to be expended, and putting the money derived from the reserves into the Treasury, where it belongs.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the purpose of the Senator is to impose the expense of the forest reserves upon the tax-paying public of the United States?

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator will just think for a moment, he will see that it does not make any difference whether we pay it in this way or in the way he suggests, except that we keep in touch all the time. We get the money into the Treaskeep in touch all the time. We get the money into the Treasury from the sales of timber upon the forest reserves. We get the money into the Treasury from the rental for grazing lands. We appropriate it and pay it out for the maintenance of the forest reserves. In my judgment, as I stated yesterday, no official of the Government should be permitted to sell the Government's property and take the receipts and put them into a generate fined and even what the water without conjugate. separate fund and expend the money without coming to Con-

Mr. NEWLANDS. I quite agree with the Senator that Congress should make all appropriations, but it does seem to me Mr. HEMENWAY. Then we are together, and there is nothing to discuss.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It seems to me, as a matter of bookkeeping, it would be very much better to keep it in this special fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call attention to the fact that the amendment on page 39 was disagreed to because it is existing law, and it being existing law it will not be affected in any way by the legislation we are now proposing, and by the terms of existing law this money is not paid out of the special fund. It reads:

That 10 per cent of all money received from each national forest during any liscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said national forest is situated, etc.

That, of course, means that it is paid out of the Treasury, as other funds are disbursed. So we do not need to take into consideration this provision at all. It is existing law and will not be interfered with by the transfer of the money now in this special fund to the general fund.

Mr. FLINT. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the appropriation for forest reserves, in the event that this amendment should be adopted. The appropriation is $900,000. The expense for the year is estimated at $2,500,000, and if this amendment be adopted and the money now in that fund or hereafter collected should be covered into the Treasury, then there would be no money available to carry on the business of the forest reserves for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. ALDRICH. Here is the million three hundred thousand

Mr. FLINT. The expenses are estimated at $2,500,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the appropriation is not sufficient, it can be increased. I supposed the appropriation of a little over a million dollars would be sufficient.

Mr. FLINT. The estimate, as I have it here, for the fiscal year 1908 is as follows: The appropriation should be $900,000; the amount received as estimated from timber sales, $900,000; grazing, $800,000, making the total receipts $1,700,000; appropriation, $900,000; total from all resources, $2,600,000, and the estimated cost of administration is $2,500,000, leaving $100,000

Mr. HEMENWAY. That, I understand, includes the million dollars that they want to put into improvements. Of course, if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and that committee think that the expense of maintaining the forest reserves during the next fiscal year will be $2,600,000 or $2,500,000, that would be a matter which could very well be discussed by the Senate. I can not understand how that much money could be properly expended in administering forest reserves during the next fiscal year.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator from Indiana? Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly, Mr. WARREN. Of course it would not be expended in the ordinary running expenses. It is only a question as to how much we shall do in the way of cutting roads and trails and building telephone lines, etc. We are not to expend two million and a half for the ordinary running expenses. Every dollar that is expended for road making or telephone building is money that saves expense or should save it hereafter, and give better forest fire insurance as well.

Mr. HEMENWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand that the $900,000, or the million dollars in round numbers, that we have here is for the expense of maintaining the forest reserves, force, etc., during the next fiscal year, and that a sum in addition is to go for permanent improvements? There is $500,000 in here now for that

Mr. WARREN. It is a question about the $900,000, whether it will entirely cover the expenses. That estimate was based on using the forest earnings as well. I agree with the Senator that the forest and grazing lands should not become a matter of large profit to the Government, and that if we are to make any revenue out of them it should merely be enough to sustain the forests and administration expenses. My criticism—and I have always had that criticism and have often expressed it, and I express it again now-against the forest reserves is that they have charged too much for grazing and in some cases charged too much for the timber. But on investigation as to the timber, I find that the Forester is not at all to blame, for he is in this position: If he allows one man to have timber at $2 a thousand and some other man is ready to pay $3 for it, the latter raises the complaint that he is discriminated against and that there

On the other hand, when it is open for competitive bids, then it is bid up to four or five or more dollars a thousand, which seems to be an uncalled-for price. I confess I have nothing just now to offer as to what shall be done about this particular situation, but the circumstances exist as I state them, that these large prices are where the lumber is eagerly sought after and where there is competitive bidding. I think we should appropriate as much as is necessary to preserve these forests, regard-less of what they earn. We should be careful how we put a tax upon the people as to earnings from these reserves and take care that it shall be no more than will pay the running expenses and eventually pay for the improvements.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is important that we should know whether the estimates of these expenditures cover the provisions contained on page 71 of this bill. In other words, the proposition here is to turn over to the Agricultural Department, and to this Bureau of it, all of the unappropriated and unre-served lands of the United States. Will these proposed expenditures cover the care and improvement of that land as well as this?

Mr. PROCTOR. No; they do not. That has not been considered at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. So, if this amendment should be adopted another appropriation of a large sum will be required for the care of these lands as well as the others?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. That is entirely a separate thing, and the proposition is that there shall be only so much charged as will pay the running expenses, and the surplus will go to the States.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would require an additional appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. No; it would not. Mr. PROCTOR. I am not entire

I am not entirely satisfied but that the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana might do some harm which he does not anticipate. I know he does not wish it, but I have fear as to the word "heretofore." I have no objection whatever to any other part of the amendment. This money has been deposited in the Treasury as a special fund under the law of last year. It would be a query with me whether it would be in order, whether this is not a change in existing law, to put in the word "heretofore."

But, aside from that, I fear this money is necessary to pay the expenses incurred. We have carefully stopped any trouble of that kind in the future. It strikes me that what has been done had better be left as it is. I wish to conform to the Senator's views just as far as I can, but it seems to me it is better to strike out that word. Then I will be satisfied with

Mr. HEMENWAY. In view of the suggestion of the chairman of the committee and in view of the fact that we have stricken out $500,000 on page 42, I am inclined to think that the money now on hand ought to be left to be expended.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amount of the fund?

Mr. CARTER. About $361,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Unexpended about $361,000. Mr. ALDRICH. The statement was made yesterday.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Since then we have had a statement that some of it has been expended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Pertinent to the suggestion that the special fund already on hand should not be converted into the Treasury, I would call attention to the specific condition of this fund. Yesterday I was advised that the amount on hand in the special fund was $361,104.88. By the annual report for the last year I find that the field expenses of maintaining the forest reserves, covering the salaries of supervisors, rangers, and guards, traveling expenses of supervisors and rangers, furniture and equipment on reservations, communication, roads, trails, bridges, and telephones; shelter cabins, fences, etc.; protection, fire lines, flash burning, etc.; emergencies in fire time, aggregated $43,-323.07. That is a small item to provide for out of a fund now on hand aggregating $361,104, and it seems to me that all of this large appropriation which we are proposing now is to go into the building of new roads, telephone lines, and the general exploiting of the property as though it were a private estate to be put in shape to produce some revenue.

Inasmuch as it seems to be the sentiment of the Senate that the forest reserves are not to be held by the Government as a source of profit, but merely for the purpose of protecting an existing asset, it is utterly inconsistent to equip these forest reserves with a system of public roads and telephones that are to be used only by the foresters in the performance of their duties. It is a pretty large expenditure—$500,000 plus $361,000, $800,000-for the building of trails and roads for the accommodation of employees whose gross salaries do not exceed $45,000. It is a pretty expensive household for them to be placed in for the performance of this duty, whether it is important or unimportant.

Then, again, should the Forestry Service be permitted to equip the forests, that are not, under any possible construction of law, deemed to exist forever, with a system of public roads built not upon the plan of the necessity of the public, but built upon the plan of the necessity of the forest rangers? The public builds roads to connect places of business, communities, localities, for the convenience of the individual. This $800,000 is to be used for the construction of roads and telephone lines not for the use of the public at all, but for the use of a few officers engaged in this service. It seems to me we may well pause before adopting the amendment suggested by the junior Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are not the public permitted to use the roads through the reserves?

Mr. HEYBURN. The public may use those roads, and I have the rules and the Use Book here. While nominally they have free access to them, if the whole country is a forest reserve what business has the public in there? What business can they transact? How can they make the roads valuable for public use, even though the public be permitted to pass over them for the mere pleasure of doing so? The forest reserve is closed against all individual enterprise. Wherein can it be necessary to spend a million dollars for the purpose of thus equipping forest reserves to be used by Government officers alone?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator a question. posing there is an important town at the north of a forest reserve and another important town at the south, would not the public be permitted to traverse those roads in the forest reserve to get from one community to another?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer the Senator by calling attention to rule 63.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I think if there is an inhibition of that kind it ought to be removed. That is my personal opinion. I do not know much about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. These are the conditions under which the roads and trails may be used by the public. They are stated in rule 63, at page 82, of the Use Book—the last edition issued. I will call the special attention of the Senate to this restriction, because it is of such an unusual character as to challenge us for consideration at this time. This was formerly regulation 22. It affects these roads, and it reads in this way:

Regulation 63 (formerly regulation 22). Persons who own, or who have leased from the owners, land within any reserve which they desire to use for grazing purposes will be allowed to cross the reserve lands with their stock to reach such private holdings; but when the stock will be grazed on reserve land en route, they must make application to the supervisor for the privilege of crossing. The application must be accompanied by a personal certificate of title showing the description and ownership of the land, and, if leased from an owner, a copy of the lease must state the number of stock to be taken in, the length of time required to cross the reserve land, the route over which the stock is to be driven, the period during which the stock will remain upon the private land, and how much stock the owned or leased land will pasture during the period specified.

When the private land is unfenced a special clause may be inserted in the agreement waiving the right to the exclusive use of the private land and allowing it to remain open to other stock grazed under permit, in consideration of which a permit will be issued free of charge, allowing the stock to be grazed at large upon the forest reserve, but the grazing fee must be paid on all stock over the estimated grazing capacity of the private lands.

When any such application is made to the supervisor he will examine it, and if he finds it reasonable and just and made in good faith for the purpose of utilizing such private holdings only he will approve it and forward it, accompanied by all papers supporting it, to the Forester. After the Forester approves the application due notice will be given the supervisor, who may then issue a permit allowing the stock to enter.

Now, that is what they call free ingress and egress to their

Now, that is what they call free ingress and egress to their lands and holdings. That is the proceeding a man must go through to get to his own property when it is surrounded by a forest reserve.

So I say that is the class of roads they are proposing to expend a million dollars of the Government's money to construct, under the suggestion that they might be useful to private individuals as well as to forest employees.

What is the necessity for constructing roads and telephone lines? It is said to be in order to have quick and efficient means of signaling or calling together the reserve forces in case of fire. How is a fire going to originate in a forest reserve if there is nobody there but the forest-reserve officers, unless it origi-nates from lightning or such a cause? These forest lands are not open to free access on the part of the people. If a forest fire arises in a forest reserve, it must either be by the act of God, in a stroke of lightning, or it must originate with some of the employees, who are the sole persons upon the forest reserve. Yet they would expend a million dollars in order that they may rush to the assistance of each other in the event of a fire being started upon the forest reserve. Let the people in there to make their homes and they will see to it that the fires do not gain headway.

It seems to me that the fund now on hand should go into the Treasury of the United States, because if we leave it at the disposition of this Bureau of the Government it will be put to these useless and wrong purposes and will serve no good purpose to the public. I should like to see the amendment remain as it was, so that the whole fund would go into the Treasury of the United States

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. Does he not think, in view of the fact that these lands were once devoted to the irrigation fund, that at least a large proportion of the proceeds of the sale of the timber really should be transferred to it?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that calls to my mind a suggestion that has frequently occurred to me. The result of this proceeding is to starve the irrigation fund, to which we have looked for great results. Every acre of land that you withdraw from settlement is withdrawn from the reclamation fund. say this whole proceeding is one that results in starving the reclamation fund. The reclamation fund is made up of the sale of the public lands, and if you withdraw the public lands from sale, to that extent you have withdrawn from the resources of the reclamation fund.

It appears to me singular that those Senators whose interests lie in the States where they depend upon the reclamation of the arid land should be found here supporting a policy for the creation of forest reserves which withdraws 121,000,000 acres from sale, when if that 121,000,000 acres should remain a part of the public domain open to settlement and sale it would contribute to the reclamation fund to the extent of millions and millions Yet, as though it were, intended to defeat the purpose of the reclamation fund, upon the enactment of that great law which is bringing millions of acres and hundreds of thousands of settlers to our new country, they have withdrawn the resources upon which this reclamation law depended for its efficiency

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has made a slight modification of the amendment he introduced, and has added a proviso in regard to the 10 per cent, as was sug-I ask that it be agreed to, following the amendment which begins in line 7

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Following the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, at the end of line 7, page 42, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That all money hereafter received by or on account of the Forest Service for timber or from any other source of forest reservation revenue shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Provided further, That 10 per cent of all moneys received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which such reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated.

Provided further, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of such reserve shall be proportionate to its area therein.

Provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory or any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

Mr. PATTERSON. There ought to be a medification of the total income of the county of the service of the service of the county of the county of the service of the county of the count

Mr. PATTERSON. There ought to be a modification of that amendment. I refer to the part of it which requires 10 per cent to be paid to the State officer for the use of the school fund of the particular county in which the forest reserve is situated. Forest reserves occupy entire counties, and there are some forest reserves that will give a very considerable amount of revenue where there are few schools. You will have some schools starving for the want of some such appropriation as this, while others will have appropriated for the schools within the county in which the forest reserve is situated much more than they can possibly use. I therefore suggest—

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure. I therefore suggest that the amendment be modified so that the 10 per cent shall go to the proper State officer, to be used for school purposes, without confining the use of it to the county in which the forest reserve is situated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that that provision is now the law. There was some doubt expressed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Wyoming as to whether or not my amendment would repeal by implication the law. So we just depend on the law and leave it

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask that the amendment be modified to that extent.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I think, on further consideration, the Senator will see the justice of the provision as it is. The idea is to recompense the locality to some extent, at least, for the injury that results by reason of the withdrawal from taxation and revenue producing of this land in their midst. If the timber within a certain county be withdrawn from sale and entry, it is not revenue producing. Then should not this 10 per cent that is derived from the sale of timber in that county or locality go to that county?

Mr. PATTERSON. Ah, Mr. President, the head of the forest reserve has authority to sell timber, and to sell great quantities of timber. The Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Wyoming, I know, will bear witness that these forest reserves are in localities in which there is little or no population. In the State of Idaho they cover entire counties. In the State of Colorado they cover entire counties in which there are but few people and in which there is no necessity for many schools, These very few schools will answer every purpose. Why should 10 per cent of the proceeds of timber that may be cut and that might amount to half a million dollars on a reserve in one county be used for school purposes?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the inquiry of the Senator may be answered. If he will look at the amendment, he will find that if the money is not needed it will not be used in that county, because the amendment provides that the total amount paid to the county shall not exceed 40 per cent of the revenue which the county derives from other sources.

Mr. WARREN. And, further, it provides that the money can be used for public roads.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. It does not necessarily follow that the entire 10 per cent shall be paid to the county, but it is to be paid to the county up to that point where the 10 per cent from the reserve equals 40 per cent of the county revenues from all other sources

Mr. WARREN. Then it can be used for schools, for public roads, or for both.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to say to my friend from Colorado that this modification of the amendment was agreed to by his colleague [Mr. Telles] last year. At the time I presented the amendment, which was later adopted, the senior Senator from Colorado was opposed to it for the reasons which the Senator now indicates. Afterwards the amendment was modified so that it was acceptable to him, except he claimed that it ought to be 20 or 25 per cent instead of 10 per cent.

I hope the Senator from Colorado will see the wisdom of the law remaining as it now is, for under its wise provisions the State of Colorado, I think, received last year nearly $20,000, which went into the school fund of the respective counties or into the road fund of his State, as it did also in the same proportion in the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am not very insistent about it, but Colorado has a very intelligent system of school laws. The State legislature looks after education in every county in the State. I have heard little or no complaint about the amount of the educational fund for the different counties of the State, and I think Senators will be able to say the same of their own States,

I can readily understand how it may be made to coerce, as it were, the payment of a very large sum of money in a particular locality in a particular area, and especially in an area that under the forest-reserve system can not be populated, and in which there is little or no necessity for schools and in which a comparatively small sum will make a sufficient educational

Now, then, why not let this money go into the State treasury, to be disposed of according to the wisdom of the legislature?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure. Mr. HEYBURN. Is it true in Colorado, as it is in Idaho, that the admission act gave the States sections 16 and 36 as a school grant?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. And is it not true that by the terms of the admission act of Colorado and of Idaho the money derived from public school lands, sections 16 and 36, must go into the general fund of the State, to be disposed of, not as limited by this amendment, but as provided by the legislature of the State itself? That is true in Idaho.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, yes; that is true of Colorado.

Mr. HEYBURN. I assumed that it is true of Colorado. amendment repeals the admission act of Idaho so far as its public lands are concerned. Of course the admission act of a State can not be repealed, because Congress has no power to modify the admission act of a State.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit an interruption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado

yield to the Senator from Montana? Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the fact to be that the right of the State to lease sections 16 and 36 within a forest reservation is not abridged and is not questioned. An issue of that kind arose quite recently with reference to one of the forest reserves in Montana, and the Chief Forester advised me, and finally issued instructions to the supervisor, that the right of the State to its proportionate share of the lease money from sections 16 and 36 was unquestioned.

Mr. HEYBURN. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I will reply briefly in a moment to that. The question that I raise is not as to the right to lease the lands; it is as to the distribution of the fund resulting from the lands that have been leased.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The inequality of the amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado, coupled with the remarks of the Senator from Idaho, will be made manifest from this statement. Sections 16 and 36 are scattered over the State in every county. Therefore, each county gets a revenue from the general school fund which is acquired from the rental or sale of those lands proportionate to the number of the school pupils which that county or district has.

Mr. HEYBURN. But not proportionate to the number of acres of land in the county.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That depends upon the value of the land. Each county relatively has the same amount of school land, sections 16 and 36, in every township; but this is the inequality which would flow from the proposition of the Senator from Colorado. Some counties of large areas have a county government to support. Suppose one-half of the area of that county is taken from under the taxing power, ought not the land which is taken from under the taxing power of that county contribute to the support of the county government?

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, it is not a question as to what ought to be done; it is a question as to what

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We are not interfering with sections 16 and 36 at all, in my view of the case.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, in Idaho they have included more than a million acres of sections 16 and 36 within forest reserves, and are leasing them and using them and selling timber from them without regard to the State's rights.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say, then, in my opinion, in that as in many other instances, the action of the Bureau of Forestry is entirely unwarranted by law. But to proceed to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Colorado, if this land in the individual county be withdrawn from taxation, ought not the proceeds of that land, 10 per cent, or whatever is contributed toward school and road purposes, to the support of those objects in the county from which the land has been withdrawn from taxation?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not under the constitution of Idaho or the law creating the State. When Idaho was made a State the constitution had been adopted, and it is referred to and approved in express terms in the admission act. The constitution of Idaho says not that this money shall be used to maintain public schools-we tax for that-but that the public school fund of the State shall forever remain inviolate and intact. Our supreme court has held that it can not even be used for the purpose of buildings, but it remains intact, and that only the interest or income from the fund can be used for the purpose of buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator presumes that I am ignorant of that statement.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not presume that. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, Mr. President, nobody has ever assumed that the principal of the school fund, either in his State or mine, could be used; but it is the revenue derived from the school lands that is used.

Mr. HEYBURN. We do not treat it as revenue; and our supreme court does not treat the fund derived from the use of the school lands as a fund that may be disseminated. It is the interest on the money.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly so. There is no difference between the Senator and myself, but the Senator is injecting into a statement that I desire to make something that is not relevant.

Mr. HEYBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will later make myself plain.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I understand the school-land proposition, the State gets the benefit at large of every acre of school land that is used. Am I correct?

Mr. HEYBURN. In the absence of forest reserves?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In the presence of a forest reserve, unless the forest-reserve officials act illegally in re-

Mr. HEYBURN. They take exclusive possession of it.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is not the fault of the law.
The law makes it the State's property.

Now, if the Senator will allow me, in reference to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, I asked him the question whether it were not fair and proper that the county from whose taxing power the forest reserve is drawn should receive the benefit of the percentage of that forest reserve, money that is paid into the State, in preference to the county, which has all this property still subject to taxation, and from which no land has been withdrawn?

As an illustration, in the county in which I live-it is a county of some considerable size—the expense of a county government there is very great. Yet from the property of that county, which would in the course of time become taxable, has been withdrawn in various areas and for other reasons more than enough land to cover the whole State of Massachusetts. Now, having withdrawn from the county of Uinta that much of the possible taxing power of the county, ought not the 10 per cent, or whatever other per cent is derived from the use of that withdrawn land, be devoted to the support of the county? I submit that to the Senator for his consideration.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, a simple answer to the Senator from Wyoming is that the lands that are included in forest reservations are not taxable by the State for any purpose. They will only possibly yield a revenue, and that is the possibility of settlement under the homestead laws. But they have a right to settle under the terms of the forest-reserve act upon agricultural lands within forest reserves. So the creation of forest reserves does not take away from the county any taxable property whatever under the language of the law

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Theoretically, no; practically, yes;

as the Senator well knows

Mr. PATTERSON. But we are now talking about the law. When a forest reserve is created it takes from no county any taxable property.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I can hardly allow that statement to pass unchallenged. As a matter of fact—

Mr. PATTERSON. Of course I do not want to choke down the consciousness of the Senator from Wyoming, but nevertheless I am speaking of it as a legal proposition. Taking no taxable property from the county, why should there be additional revenues that would be collected by taxation given to the

Of course, if the Senators from the arid States, States in which the forest reserves are situated, are sufficiently in love with the present arrangement to allow it to go unchanged, I do not propose to be too persistent in insisting upon a change. But I do know, Mr. President, that if the purpose of the law is carried out, in my county revenues dependent as a matter of course upon the amount of timber that may be sold and licenses secured for grazing will be in revenues for school purposes far in excess of their needs.

It seems to me that the State legislature should be allowed to dispose of the revenue derived from this source as its wisdom and sense of justice would dictate. It will result in great inequality, especially if the revenues from the forest reserves increase—and they are bound to increase. If there is timber amounting to $700,000,000 on the public domain, or $300,000,000, and that timber is to be used to meet the needs of the county and will be cut under wise regulations, it must follow that some counties will have given to them an immense revenue, and since the revenue is confined to the counties in which the forest reserves are, there will be some counties receiving these large revenues that have little or no population and scarcely any school population worth mentioning.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will again allow me, the counties which have little or no population, and consequently very little taxable property, would derive little or no revenue from taxation. Therefore no immense amount of money can go into such counties, from the fact that-

Mr. PATTERSON. I will not dwell any longer on that proposition

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This 10 per cent is limited to not to exceed 40 per cent of the revenues.

Mr. PATTERSON. Coming to the 40 per cent. Mr. President. I am inclined to think that a little criticism of that provision will show that if it is correctly interpreted, as the language requires it to be interpreted, only 40 per cent of the revenues would go to the State at all, and there is no provision for the other 60 per cent.

Let me call the attention of Senators to the language of the law, as the same exists, for the purpose of demonstrating the correctness of what I say.

That 10 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated.

Up to that point the provision requires that this 10 per cent shall be paid to the legislature, to be appropriated by the legislature for one single specific purpose, and that is for the benefit of the roads and schools of the county in which the forest reserves are situated. Now we come to the proviso:

Provided. That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportioned to its area therein.

And provided further—

This is what I desire to call the attention of Senators to-

And provided further. That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

You can only pay it to the State, and it shall be used by the legislature for the specific purpose of schools and roads in the Then it provides that whatever amount is paid shall counties. not exceed 40 per cent of the revenues of the counties in which these forest reserves are situated. What is going to become of the other 60 per cent? It is all paid under the provisions of the bill, and to be employed for a specific use within particular The proviso declares that only 40 per cent shall be paid to the State for such county, and it is an amount equal to 40 per cent of the revenues of the county, and that only shall be paid to the State for that purpose. Where is the rest going?

Where is the 60 per cent going?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. PATTERSON. The language is clear, perfectly clear. There is no question in the world as to the purpose for which

Let me ask the Senator-

Mr. PATTERSON. As to the purpose for which it goes to the State. A limitation is placed upon it.
Mr. HALE. Does the Senator suppose

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator suppose we can change that law in this bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. We can, unless there is a point of order raised.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly there would be a point of order raised at once. I do not see that what the Senator proposes is practicable. We can not change that law, which is existing law, by any amendment to this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine every now and then, when he thinks an amendment which changes existing law is necessary, graciously permits it to go through for the benefit of the country at large. When he wants an amendment, even though it changes existing law, he does not see any lack of ability to change existing law.

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether I want this or not; but clearly we can not change on this bill—this subject is not before the Senate-we can not change the existing law on this That is not involved in this bill at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. I confess, Mr. President, that I do not understand the logic of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. President-Mr. HEMENWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I say the sole object of adding this provision to my amendment was the fear expressed by Senators that this amendment might by implication repeal the existing law. I do not think it would; but there was some fear expressed here, and so I put this proviso on. Now it is clear that the existing law can not be changed on this bill, because there are a number of Senators who have stated that they would make a point of order against any change of existing law.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President

Mr. LODGE. Has the question been taken?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I merely wished to make a parliamentary inquiry. Has the pending amendment been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been agreed to.
Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I realize that very much time is being taken up in side matters, and I shall not press this view any further; but my interpretation of the language is positively correct, and, if the law should be administered under a fair construction of the language, Congress would fail unqualifieldy in having carried out the object of the legislation it is attempting

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask that the amendment be stated, as I have changed one or two words of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, at the end of line 7, after the amendment offered at that place and already agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That all moneys received after July 1, 1907, by or on account of the Forest Service, for timber or from any other source of forest-reservation revenue shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The Secretary need not read more. Mr. HEMENWAY. The Secretary need not read more. That is the only change I have made. I only put in "July 1" be-Mr. HEMENWAY. cause there was some doubt as to whether this would be operative before the beginning of the next fiscal year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemen-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on yesterday, in view of certain statements made by Senators, I gave notice of a proposed amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] calling attention to the fact that we hoped to have a forest reserve in the White Mountains at some time, and we did not wish to be interfered with so far as our control of that matter was con-I have seen the Chief Forester, and he has assured me that we would not be interfered with; but I have still an impression that the amendment I offered is a wise one, and I propose to submit it to the Senate.

I am unable to see why the Forestry Service should levy tribute upon individuals or corporations because of the fact that the reserves conserve the water, as they claim, any more than we when we improve our streams at Government expense should levy tribute upon the men who run steamboats and schooners and canoes on those streams. I think it is bad policy. I can see that there is sense in making a charge for timber that is removed, but why there should be a charge for the conservation of the water surpasses my comprehension. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, and trust that it may be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary. The Secretary. After the last amendment adopted it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby expressly prohibited from making any charge whatsoever for the conservation or use of water in the streams running through or any part of which is contiguous to any forest reserve.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I want to speak of that in connection with the practice now existing in the Department. have here a blank form, No. 832, which is the contract under which water privileges are now being granted under existing

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator has no objection to this amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. This amendment is for the purpose of preventing them from doing what they are now doing.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to it, is there?
Mr. HEYBURN. I understand there is not; but it is important, inasmuch as yesterday it was asserted here that it would not interfere with the free use of these streams, and, inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire has stated that the Chief Forester has said it will not interfere with them-

Mr. GALLINGER. In the White Mountains.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not content to consider only the White Mountains, though I want to consider them, and I am glad to have the cooperation of Senators from other States, from the States of the East, to the end that we may reduce this whole system to a reasonable basis.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. PATTERSON. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if he can see any logical reason why the Government should prevent the owners of cattle and sheep and horses from grazing them on the public domain without the payment of a fee, and not require those who use the water for commercial purposes to pay something for that? I suppose the theory upon which the Government is operating is that, being the owner of the soil, it has a right in behalf of all the people to secure a fair revenue to be used for certain purposes from those who get the benefit of the use of the public domain.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that might be true if the doctrine of riparian ownership existed. In our country it does not. Our Constitution abolished it, and the right as to the use of water is by appropriation and not under the rules of riparian ownership.

Mr. PATTERSON. It does not make any difference to whether it is under the rule of riparian ownership or not. It does not make any difference to me am opposed to the Government charging those who are using the public domain in the manner in which it has been used ever since we have had a country for the grazing of cattle or If the Government is to derive financial benefit from the public domain otherwise than from the sale of the land, I can see no logical reason why, if a great corporation goes into a canyon and erects a dam to divert the water for the purpose of constructing and operating an immense electrical power plant, it should not pay to the Government some fair sum for the use of the water that it takes possession of for commercial purposes within the forest reserves. There is no difference, logically, between granting free grazing privileges to those who own cattle and sheep and who live upon the public domain and charging for the use of the water that is flowing within the public domain when that use is made on the domain.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire, Mr. President, of the Senator whether, if we can charge for power purposes, we can not charge for irrigation purposes or for domestic use, or for any other one of the many possible uses of water?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is showing again the absurdity of this whole system. Why, if you do not charge for the use of water for irrigation purposes, will you charge for permitting your horse or your cow or your sheep to nibble that grass that grows spontaneously upon the public domain?

Mr. HEYBURN. I wonder if any Senator knows that article No. 8 in the contract that is proposed and presented by the Department contains this language:

No Member or Delegate to Congress is or shall be admitted to any share, part, or interest in this agreement or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

That is, no Member of Congress or Delegate in Congress can obtain the use of the water of these streams for pasturage or any other purpose.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. Of course the Senator from Idaho knows he is too good a lawyer not to know-that the statutes of the United States require that every contract made with the United States shall contain that very clause.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have on the desk before me the provision to which the Senator refers. It has no more application to this class of provisions, which may be termed one of the domestic contracts of life, in which every person is entitled to share equally-it has no more reference to it than it has to the question of transportation upon railroads. I have the section before me. It is section 3742.

Mr. WARREN. That is the Senator's construction of it.

me ask the Senator this question. Does the Senator believe that the contract which he holds in his hand would ever have had that language in it except for the statute he has before him?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not believe it would ever have had the language in it if the man who drew it had any conception of the intent or purpose or effect of the statute.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from California? Does the Senator from Colorado

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield the floor, Mr. President.
Mr. PERKINS. I simply wanted to follow up the question asked by the Senator from Colorado by asking my friend from Idaho another question. If you are to charge the poor farmer and the poor stockman who takes his cattle and his sheep into the forest reservation to feed them, why should you give the corporations the timber free, without charge? Why should the water which has been conserved by the forest reservation be given free? Why should we give power which is equivalent to that of a coal mine-for certainly the streams of water flowing through the reserves which generate power to run turbine wheels that generate electric power are worth from six to seven dollars a month in horsepower-why should that be given gratuitously, without charge?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this water has been running through the forest reservations generating power in imagination.

Mr. PERKINS. I would ask my friend, if he had control of the waters of a river flowing through his land, if he would permit one to go on and enjoy it without payment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, air and water do not come within the same class or contemplation as the other items.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the water flowing through this land belongs to the Government-

Mr. HEYBURN. Not at all.
Mr. PERKINS. And to the people of this country.
Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, by virtue of an ac

Mr. President, by virtue of an act of Congress it belongs to the States and is under control of the States. subject to appropriation under the laws of the State by direct It does not belong to the Government. enactments. preme Court of the United States says that no one has title to the water; it is only to the use of the water, and that having been transferred to the State it is a complete answer to the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. You can not use the water unless you use the lands through which it flows, and you must utilize it by building dams or utilizing natural falls over which it flows,

Mr. HEYBURN. Congress has given to individuals and to the States the right of way over the public domain and by direct law for all conduits for water and for trails and for roads. That is sufficient to answer the question of the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend from Idaho is one of the best lawyers we have west of the Rocky Mountains, and he understands as thoroughly as any Senator on this floor that the riparian rights of water in the State of California can not be diverted from the channel and used for other purposes, depriving one who resides on the stream below from its use.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont regarding the appropriation for Forest Service? As I understand, we appropriate $900,000 for administration during the fiscal year 1907, and the Senate has since also provided that all revenues and all moneys received by the Forest Service for timber or from any other source, or forest-reservation revenue, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The question I wish to ask him is whether or not that amendment, applying as it does to all receipts after July 1, 1907next July-will not have the effect of taking out from the fund available for the expenses of the Forest Service during the fiscal year commencing July 1 next the moneys which otherwise under existing law would be used for administration?

As I understand, the receipts from timber and other sources amounted to about $1,250,000 a year. The Forest Service has asked for $900,000 in addition to that, making nearly two million and a quarter, which, under the bill as it stood, was available for the expenses of the administration for the next fiscal year. I wish to call the Senate's attention to the fact that this amendment providing that these moneys received during the next fiscal year shall be paid into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt subtracts from the sum total available for administration during the next fiscal year about a million and a quarter dollars.

I imagine it is not in the intention of the Senate to cut down the expenses of the administration of this Forestry Service more than one half, and I will ask the Senator whether this amendment would not have that effect?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, it is my impression that it does have that effect.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, from the debate, it is the intention of the Senate that that should be the effect?

Mr. PROCTOR. I was very much afraid, from the nature of the vote, that it was the intention of the Senate that it should have that effect. I regretted it very much indeed, but that was

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I call attention then of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that this means cutting down the existing force of administration of the forestry reserves one-half.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, yes. The Senator from Rhode Island says no. Let me demonstrate that to him. I think he did not listen to my explanation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to say, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, that it requires about 1,000 men-rangers, etc.to care for the forest reservations, to protect them from the devastation of fire and the ravages of the stock that is roaming at will over them. That is $1,000,000 alone. It certainly would require another million for us to properly care for these forest reserves during the ensuing year. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to make a sufficient appropriation for the care of the forest reserves so that we may throw them open to

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from Rhode Island will give me his attention I will try to demonstrate to him that our action has really reduced the fund available for administration during the next fiscal year one-half. I assume that that is not the intention.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose we can go back and take up all the various provisions of this bill that we passed over. So far as can see, we have appropriated $143,000 for clerical work in Washington. The rest of this appropriation, which amounts to $1,300,000, plus six or seven hundred thousand dollars received before the 1st of January-

Mr. KEAN. The 1st of July.

Mr. ALDRICH. In all, $2,000,000 is to be used for the maintenance and improvement of forest reserves. If we cut it down one-half, I do not know what would happen to this country

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me say-

ALDRICH. In other words, if $4,000,000 are required instead of $2,000,000, I certainly have misunderstood this question from the start.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me explain to the Senator from in cash. I do not remember how much it was; probably $900,000. Rhode Island. We made an appropriation last year of so much

A million dollars. Mr. HEYBURN.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That was for the present fiscal year. But in addition to that they had to pay for the expense of administration $1,250,000, received from the sales of timber, etc., making very nearly $2,250,000 for general administration. Now, we have provided for the next fiscal year $900,000, but $2,250,000 for have also provided that the money derived from the sales of timber, etc. (which during this fiscal year goes into the fund from the sales of timber and can be paid out upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture), shall hereafter be put into the general Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. So the million and a quarter which is available this year is absolutely locked up next year, for one year from July 1, 1907.

Let me suggest that the real purpose of Congress was to change this system of accounts and not to affect the total of this fund, and if you will simply substitute for the words "July first, nineteen hundred and seven," the words "July first, nineteen hundred and eight," then it will leave that million and a quarter subject to the command of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief Forester.

The Senator shakes his head as to that. Then I suggest, if we are not going to leave that money in the fund subject to the disposal of the Secretary of Agriculture, we should have increased this appropriation of $900,000 by the sum of one million and a quarter dollars, so as to make the sum available during the next fiscal year equal in amount to the sum available during the present fiscal year.

I do not understand that it is the purpose of Congress to cut down the sum.

Mr. HEMENWAY.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is appropriated in this bill, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, $143,000 for clerical services in Washington. There is appropriated $500,000 for permanent improvements. There is appropriated in addition to that $900,000 for expenses, etc. There is a fund on hand now of something in the neighborhood of $314,000. Then there are all the funds to be received up to July 1; probably, taking the estimates of the Chief Forester, $700,000 more. So you have $700,000, $314,000 now on hand, making a million dollars. You have $900,000 appropriated for expenses, making $1,900,000. Take this $500,000, and it makes $2,400,000, and you have to add to it the $143,000, making $2,543,000, two millions and over for maintenance, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, $500,000 for permanent improvements. Evidently that is an ample sum for the next fiscal year.

Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to Mr. WARREN.

ask a question of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that the $900,000, as I understand it, includes the $143,200 which the Senator from Indiana referred to, and in fact all of the appropriations under the Forest Service head until you come to that point in the billin fact, in the entire bill. So the entire appropriation will be $900,000 plus $500,000. Total, $1,400,000. Then, of course, the Senator must remember when he computes the income between now and July that he must also look out for the expenses for the balance of the present fiscal year as well as the following fiscal year, because the money received between now and the 1st of July will be largely expended in the four months before the 1st of July.
Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but for the fiscal year 1995 the total expenditures for maintenance were only $375,000, while in 1908 $2,000,000, in round numbers, is appropriated for maintenance and $500,000 for permanent improvements. If we are going to make the same rapid increase in appropriations for other branches of the Government, at the end of the fiscal year 1908 we will be bankrupt.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there any question before the Senate, Mr.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator, from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, if I may be allowed, I will make a reply to the Senator from Indiana. I am sure we all want to understand this matter, and that is all. I am sure the purpose of the Senator is not to reduce this fund.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not want to reduce it beyond the amount that I have mentioned, but certainly this appropriation is ample. If we increase the appropriations for other branches of the Government at the same rate, it will simply mean bankruptcy at the end of the fiscal year 1908; and while I have great admiration for the manner in which the Chief Forester administers this service, for he is a wonderfully enthusiastic, energetic public official, yet we must keep within some bounds the expenditures of this Bureau as well as other bureaus of the Government; and certainly, also, there is, in round figures, $2,500,000, if the estimates of the Forester as to the amount of the receipts is correct, which will be available for the year 1908.

The Senator speaks of the estimate of a million and a quarter for the next fiscal year. The receipts up to date have not been a million and a quarter at all per year. Eight hundred thousand dollars is the total amount received and on hand-and this law was enacted in 1905-showing that the receipts have not been anything like a million and a quarter a year, but much less than that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there is no misapprehension on this side of the Chamber as to what was done by the amendment and what was intended by the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly there is no misapprehension if the purpose of the Senate was to cut down by one-half the sum available for administration, for when this bill was framed by the committee its view was that for the year 1907 to 1908 there would be available for pending administration not only the $900,000 provided for by the bill, but the million and a quarter dollars which it was estimated would come in from receipts from timber sales, etc. We have absolutely cut off that million and a quarter. We propose that it shall be locked up in the Treasury and that it shall not be available to the Secretary of Agriculture or the Forestry Reserve Service, and we leave only $900,000. I say the purpose of the committee was to give that $900,000 and the million and a quarter, and I suggest that the only way we can remedy that is by providing that this money shall not go into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt until one year later, or if we are unwilling to do that and propose to lock it up in the Treasury, then we should appropriate from it now the sum necessary to secure the ordinary administration of this Service.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator from Nevada to claim-I am not sure whether he is a member of the Committee on Agriculture or not—that it was the purpose of the Committee on Agriculture to appropriate by this bill $1,900,000 for the next fiscal year, plus the million and a quarter which it is estimated will be received from grazing and lumber during the next fiscal year, amounting in all to $3,200,000 for this Service for the next fiscal year. If they had any such purpose, or if the Senator from Nevada has any such purpose, I certainly do not agree with it, and I do not think the Senators who have been discussing this question and who have views upon the subject propose to have $3.200,000 appropriated for this Bureau next year, that being $700,000 more than the estimates, more than the largest sum the Chief Forester asks for the next fiscal year. We have no such purpose. I think we understand fully the effect of the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the Senator to insist that we have already appropriated $1,900,000 for this Service?

Mr. ALDRICH. I said the committee recommended $1,900,000 plus, as the Senator says, $1,200,000, which is to come from the receipts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the committee intended that, the Senate, in my opinion, does not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The question is what does the Senate intend now? Does it intend to cut down the entire appropria-

Mr. ALDRICH. The language adopted by the Senate is perfectly plain. There can be no misunderstanding whatever about it. It appropriates $1,400,000, in round numbers, for this Bureau for the next fiscal year.

Mr. LODGE. For the ensuing fiscal year?

Mr. LODGE. For the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. ALDRICH. For the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator understands that, then, one-half of the foresters now employed will have to be discharged.

Mr. ALDRICH. That no basis whatever in fact. That is the Senator's deduction, which has

I insist upon it that it has.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I insist upon it that it has.
Mr. ALDRICH. We may not be able to raise trees on the arid lands of Nevada with that appropriation, but I think it is ample for all the legitimate purposes of the Bureau.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not a member of this committee. whatever may be the determination of the Senator from Rhode Island, I do not believe it is the intention of the Senate to cripple this Service. I do not believe it is the intention of the Senate to cut down the present force one-half, and I insist upon it you have done it. From the $1,400,000 $500,000 is to be applied to permanent improvements, leaving only $900,000 for administration. I am told that the $900,000 will be less than one-half the present expenses of mere administration of the forest reserves. Whatever may be the understanding or the intention of the Senator from Rhode Island, I do not believe the Senate intends such a wrong and injustice to the Service.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator from Nevada will consult the appropriation for the present fiscal year, he will find that the appropriation in this bill is a larger sum than the Bureau had for the present fiscal year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator tell me what that appropriation was?

Mr. HEMENWAY. So if the appropriation is to be cut down one-half, then in violation of the law they have employed more men than they were authorized to employ, because the law prohibits the creation of deficiencies. They are confined to the appropriation for the fiscal year; and this appropriation in the bill is larger than the Bureau had for the present fiscal year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have just been handed the law for the last year. It makes the total for Forest Service $1,000,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. To that is to be added the sum now available from the receipts from timber and other sales, aggregating, according to my information, from a million to a million and a quarter dollars; and that entire sum is now spent in administration. It goes to pay foresters and other employees, not for the purpose of permanent improvements. What have you done under this bill? You put $500,000 into permanent improve-ments, not a dollar of which can be expended for ordinary administration, and you have left only $900,000 in this bill for ordinary administration, when during the current fiscal year ordinary administration has cost at least $2,000,000.

The Senator referred to the appropriations of last year. have the bill before me. The appropriation last year was $1,000,000 for mere administration, not involving anything in the shape of permanent improvements. We have given $900,000

Mr. HEMENWAY. How much of the receipts from sales of dead and down timber and from rentals of lands for grazing purposes has been expended up to the present time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can not tell you, but I will say generally that almost all of the money received during the current fiscal year will be expended in ordinary administration before next July

Mr. HEYBURN. I can give those figures exactly.
Mr. HEMENWAY. I was told yesterday that $42,000 had been expended, but the Senator from Idaho has the correct figures and will furnish them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Last year the appropriation was $1,000,000, and the amount received up to yesterday was $869,809.44.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Up to what time? Mr. HEYBURN. Up to yesterday. That covers the necessities of the forest reserves, as demonstrated by the actual experience for last year. It more than covers them, because there is an overlap

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. I will give you all the figures together. The appropriation as it is now in the bill, with the $500,000 stricken out, leaves it stand this way for this year: The items, as reported by the Senate committee, amount to $1,900,000; deduct $500,000 from $1,900,000 and you have an item of $1,400,-000. That is the appropriation gross as it stands with the amendment striking out the $500,000. Then the balance in the Treasury now, which will be available and which we are not requiring them to turn back, is $361,104. Then the income according to the estimates of the Department before the time when they are required to turn it into the Treasury will be $700,000, making available for Forestry Service this year, with the $500,-000 stricken out, $1,461,104, which is more than a million dollars more than was necessary for the administration and all expenses last year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What does the Senator refer to when he says last year?

Mr. HEYBURN. I mean under the last appropriation for the last fiscal year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The last appropriation has not yet been

Mr. HEYBURN. I am speaking now of fiscal years, and I assume that the Department in giving us these figures has taken into consideration the expenses of the fiscal year for which the appropriation was made. That is a fair deduction.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. Is there a fund in addition to that which accrued from timber and grazing which was also expended and not included in those estimates?

Mr. HEYBURN. No. I have included in those figures all the money found necessary to maintain this branch of the Government last year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What was the total expense last year?

Mr. HEYBURN. One million dollars was the amount of money that they found necessary to expend, and we are giving them by this appropriation bill, after striking out $500,000. $2,461,104.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator insist under this bill, after striking out the $500,000, we are giving them $2,100,000?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; $2,461,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. For the next fiscal year?

Mr. HEYBURN. For the next fiscal year.
Mr. NEWLANDS. But he puts in that the moneys received during this fiscal year, which will be spent during the current fiscal year.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I put in the unexpended balance which is on hand.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I put in the admitted income which will be

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator assumes that the money on hand and the money received between now and next July will remain in the Treasury to pay the expenses of the next fiscal year.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it will remain in the Treasury.

Mr. NEWLANDS. When as a matter of fact, as I understand, the moneys will be spent in the ordinary administration for the

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

Mr. NEWLANDS. I shall not participate in the debate any longer, because we are involved in a confusion of figures. Later on, if I find that the impression I have is correct—and I think it is—I shall move to reconsider these amendments.

Mr. PROCTOR. Referring to what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] has said, I agree entirely with him as to what ought to be done under this bill.

These reserves constitute a hundred and twenty-five million acres, and to care for them properly requires a large appropriation. Many of them have been newly created, and I do not think the appropriations proposed were too large. But I think it would be economy to make the full appropriation. haps in some respects we have gone a little fast in this direction, but I am sure the country will be educated soon so that they will see the necessity of it.

The junior Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] presented all this matter very ably. He said to me in conversation that the saving of one fire by foresters in a reserve in California had earned the entire expense of the appropriation. President, I think the Senate did precisely what it intended voted against the amendments cutting down the appropriations, but so far as I can recall my voice was the only one that I heard, while the votes on the other side of the questilon were very strong. So I did not think it worth while to call for the yeas and nays, and I bowed with as much resignation as I could to what seemed to me to be the expressed will of the Senate. I will say in conclusion that at the end of next year we shall at least have had the experience.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in order that we may know we stand on this subject which has been debated, I should like to have the amendments reported as they were adopted on page 42. I have an impression that there is a great deal more to the argument of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] than we suppose. It is a question whether we ought not to reappropriate for the next fiscal year the revenues which will be derived from the sale of timber, etc., and whether that point is covered. If we provide in the amendment that this money shall be covered into the Treasury, which is not the law now, it will not be available, unless we reappropriate it. Therefore I ask that the amendments on page 42 may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests, $125,000 of which amount is to be immediately available: Provided, That hereafter on or before the 1st day of January of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress detailed estimates of all expenditures intended for this service for the next fiscal year and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year: Provided further, That all money received after July 1, 1907, by or on account of the Forest Service for timber or from any other source of forest-reservation revenue shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt: And provided further, That 10 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territory legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided further, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources: Provided further, That these shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such cou

Mr. NELSON. Under the second proviso, which has been read, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana the money derived from the forest reservations is to be put into the general fund of the Treasury after the 1st of July next under the head of "Miscellaneous expenses." If that is the case, unless we reappropriate it in some form, that money will not be available for the next fiscal year. It really amounts to this, that the appropriation for the Department for the next it will cut them off entirely from what they derive from the forest reservations during the next fiscal year; and unless we reappropriate it in some form they are cut off from that revemay be mistaken, but that is the way it strikes me.

I think we ought to cover that point and make that money vailable. I do not think it was the purpose of the Senate to available. prevent the Department from using that money, but simply that we wanted an account of it and wanted to have it appropriated, But we have failed to appropriate it, in the form in which the amendment now stands.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will indicate to the Senator, as nearly as I can, the effect of the amendment. There is appropriated by the bill, first, $500,000. Let me read what it is for.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me a question, I think I can simplify it. I understand what the bill appropriates and the Senator need not recapitulate it. By his amendment he provides that this revenue—I have called it that—after the 1st of July shall be covered into the Treasury under the head of "Miscellaneous expenses;" but by failing to put in a provision reappropriating it you tie it up in the Treasury and make it unavailable for the Forest Reserve Service.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is to be appropriated hereafter. What I wanted to demonstrate to the Senator, if I could, was that the appropriation carried by the bill and the fund now on hand and the funds that will be received before July 1 will give a much larger sum for the fiscal year 1908 than the Bureau of Forestry have ever had at their discretion to expend.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? We do not know that there will be a surplus of the revenue, but assuming that the Forestry Service will not use all the revenues derived from that source during the present fiscal year up to July 1, what will become of that surplus? Will it be covered into the Treasury again under the rest of the Senator's amendment or will it be in the air and be available for the next fiscal year?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is available for the next fiscal year under the act of February 1, 1905.

Mr. NELSON. Then you are brought down to this, that the only amount of the forest revenue, I will call it, that will be available for the next fiscal year will be the surplus that remains from this fiscal year after the 1st of July.
Mr. HEMENWAY. Absolutely.

Mr. NELSON. And unless we appropriate that it is absolutely tied up and kept from the Service.

Mr. HEMENWAY: Absolutely.

Mr. NELSON. Is not that the state of the case?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator has stated it correctly. That it the object of the amendment. It is to stop the Secretary of Agriculture from selling the Government's property and putting the money where he can check it out again—checking it out and expending it without its being appropriated by Congress. It is taking the key of the Treasury away from the Secretary of Agriculture and putting it in the hands of Congress, where it

Mr. NELSON. To that extent, if the Senator will allow me, to the principle that he is invoking I entirely agree. But how does the Senator know that the surplus of the revenue derived from the Forestry Service this year, with what we directly appropriate in this bill, will be sufficient to run the Service next year?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I can only answer the Senator by saying that, taking into consideration the amount expended up to date by the Bureau of Forestry, it indicates clearly there will be a surplus of from $700,000 up at the end of the year. As I started to say, that surplus, which is clearly indicated by the expenditures up to date, added to the amount appropriated in this bill, will be in round figures about $2,500,000.

Then, when Congress meets next winter, if it is demonstrated that the amount is not sufficient, it is very easy to make a portion of the fund immediately available, as we do this time with the appropriation of $500,000. Of the $500,000 appropriated at this time, $125,000 is made immediately available, and if next year, when our appropriation bills are passed, this sum does not prove to be sufficient-I believe it will be sufficient if the affairs are economically administered—we can easily, by making a portion of that fund immediately available, correct any error.

Of course I am free to say that it is not a satisfactory question to deal with. There seems to be no very definite estimate. As I understand it, the bill carries the estimates, and more, too. We want definite estimates. We want the Bureau of Forestry and the Agricultural Department generally and all other Departments to bring down sufficient estimates, so that we will If next winter know what they are going to do with the money. it turns out that this is not a sufficient sum of money, as I said, this, that the appropriation for the Department for the next sit is a matter that can be very easily corrected by making a part fiscal year will be simply what we give in the pending bill, and of the appropriation then made immediately available.

The Senator from Minnesota has clearly stated the purpose of the amendment. It is to cut off the use of money which be-longs in the Treasury of the United States by the Secretary of Agriculture, unless the money is appropriated by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state to the Senator that in December we will have the detailed estimates made by the Department of Agriculture as to the expenses of this Bureau, and if it is necessary to make an appropriation then, we can act with some knowledge of the service that ought to be rendered and the amount that ought to be appropriated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the statement I intended to make. Under the amendment they will send down the estimates. When the estimates come next December, if it shall appear that the sum appropriated by this bill is not sufficient, Congress can appropriate the amount required and make immediately available a sufficient sum. But we have got to get started, and the only way to get a start that I see is by the amendment that has been offered. We want to get started right. Then the estimates will come in, and having in mind the estimates of the Department we will determine whether we shall appropriate the sum suggested as necessary for the Bureau of Forestry.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Indiana. I wish to ask him whether he would justify Mr. Pinchot, the Chief Forester, during the first six months of the ensuing fiscal year in expending the entire appropriation made by Congress for that year upon the assumption that at the next session of Congress Congress would appropriate enough money to pay for the succeeding six months?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator did not-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me state right here that I make that statement upon the assumption that the fund available for the next year will be at least one million and a quarter less than will be necessary for the general expenses of the administration of the forest reserves.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator from Indiana can only speak for himself, but if the Chief Forester should expend the appropriation for the fiscal year 1908 in six months, the Senator from Indiana would go into it very carefully, and I think I would be able to prove, at least to my own satisfaction, that there had been great extravagance in administering the forest

My attention has just been called to the fact that for the fis-cal year ending June 30, 1906, it cost $1,193,000, in round figures, to administer this service.

Mr. NELSON. Did that include both the appropriation and the revenue derived from the service?

HEMENWAY. It included everything. The Senator from Kansas advises me that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, the total expenditure was $1,193,000.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator state approximately what is likely to be the expenses for the ensuing fiscal year, after the 1st of July?

Mr. HEMENWAY. From the statements I have here, running as it will now—it will have to be a rough guess, an opinion—in round figures, I should say, $1,700,000, unless from now on until July 1 they increase very rapidly the expenditures; and if they are more, they ought not to be.

I hate to repeat so often, but for 1905 the expenditures were $375,000. For 1906 they jumped up to $1,193,000. Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEMENWAY. In a minute, I wish to say if the expenditures by the different Departments were to be increased at one half or one-fourth this rate, when we come to the close of the fiscal year 1908 we would find a deficiency that would absolutely wipe every man out of Congress who was here, or it cught to do it, if the Congress of the United States will allow the expenditure of the people's money, and allow such a rapid increase in the expenditure of the different Departments of the Government, and do it in the way we have been doing it, simply appropriating a lump sum and saying to some Cabinet official, "You may spend it as you see fit; we make you the judge of what money shall be expended." We have the result of such a policy right here in this increase from 1905 to 1906.

When Congress had its hand on the key to the Treasury and made a direct appropriation and required that the receipts from the sales of timber and grazing lands should go into the Treasury, they got along with $375,000; but the minute we turned it over and said, "Sell this property and spend as you please," it increased in one year to $1,193,600; and now on the floor of the Senate we are having the argument made that even $2,500,000 is not a sufficient sum.

I say it is time to call a halt. I have tried to call it by the amendment I have introduced to-day. I believe the Senate understood what they were doing when they adopted the amendment, and I sincerely hope they will stand by it and hold the key of the Treasury in our own hands, and not turn it over again to any head of a Department in this great Government of Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have concluded what I have to say, unless the Senator wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it follow at all because an appropriation of this kind has increased from year to year that the expenditures are therefore extravagant? This has been a progressive work. It had a small beginning. Whether the work has been extravagant or not depends on the character of the work and the details of it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It does not necessarily mean that there has been an extravagant expenditure of money, but the Senator knows something about the character of these expenditures. It is proposed to build lodges in our forest reserves, I believe, with a limit of a thousand dellars on the price of the building that is to be constructed. It is proposed to erect telephone lines through the forest reserves. I do not know, but I presume in the great State represented by the Senator there are prosperous farmers who are not yet enjoying the benefits of a telephone line. I know that down

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I simply desire to say for the information of the Senator from Indiana that the telephones proposed to be constructed and operated through the reserves are not as a matter of pleasure, but as a matter of business, so that the supervisor can communicate with the rangers in the various parts of the reserve and they can all be brought to one place.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand the purpose, but can the Government stand the expenditure of money necessary to construct telephone lines for that purpose?

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLINT. I can state for the information of the Senator that the amount of loss by one fire in a reserve in the southern part of California last year would pay for the telephone lines and ten times over.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Conceding the statement of the Senator, how in the world is a telephone line going to stop a fire? I have heard that statement over and over again; but the more roads you build, the more telephone lines you build, the more lodges you build, the more people who go there, there is more danger of fire.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me? If his house were to take fire at midnight and a telephone wire enabled him to communicate with the fire department and bring the engines quickly to his relief, it would not be the telephone wire that stopped the fire, but-

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator's illustration is not a very apt one. A telephone line would be running through a forest reserve without a town for miles and miles. With a telephone in a town, where you have a fire department handy, and you can get it very quickly, you may stop the fire; but you have not any fire department out in the forest reserves. You have a few rangers scattered around through them. But that is only one item.

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator passes from the telephone question, I desire to call attention to the well-known fact that eyesight is about as good as sound and a little bit quicker. An incipient fire can be perceived in those mountain ranges 20 miles away before it has reached proportions extending beyond a good-sized camp fire. The Senator from Wisconsin will bear me out in the fact that in the Jackson Hole country, or the Jacksons Lake region, the Yellowstone Park, or any part of the great mountain country, the smoke of a very small fire can be seen a very great distance, and the perception of the danger gives warning to those who are charged with the meeting of the danger, whether it be by 'phone or sight.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This whole scheme, if I may be permitted to say it, commends itself to certain gentlemen who are dreaming about great game preserves with lodges and roads and great parks with taverns scattered somewhere through them. We are entering upon a vast amount of expenditure in the name of forest reserves that is absolutely unnecessary. From all this talk about telephone lines, and so forth, and preventing fires, I would have supposed that long before this our forests would all have been burned up. But they have been there for years and years and years; they are there yet, and they will continue to be there for many years to come.

I am not against forest reserves. I want them well and fairly administered. The only way to maintain our great system of forest reserves is to go ahead and maintain them upon economical lines. If this appropriation continues at this rate, the people of the country are some day going to call our attention to it and say, "You had better call a halt."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have said nothing on this subject, for I am not familiar with the details of the work which has been done or the work which is proposed to be done. But I think the Senator from Indiana takes a very-I will not say narrow—but inadequate view of this subject. I believe for the interest of the whole people this is one of the most important public works which has ever been inaugurated in this country. I do not believe, in this country or any other, there could be found a person better fitted to control this matter with judgment and with skill, for he has been educated to it and is devoted to it, than is Mr. Gifford Pinchot. I believe the greatest wastefulness in the world is niggardliness of expenditure in matters of public importance.

This a few years ago was deemed an experiment. It really has passed beyond the stage of experiment, and it should not be abandoned. Money sufficient should be appropriated to enable the prosecution of the work on lines of intelligence and efficiency

If the Senator from Montana alluded to my knowledge of the Jacksons Hole country, or the Jackson Lake country, in Wyoming, for the purpose of making it apparent to the Senate, I hope it satisfied the Senator that I know all that is necessary to protect the forest against an incipient fire is that the forester should use his eyes.

I agree to no such proposition as that. That assumes that the forester has notice of the incipient fire or that he is up upon a high mountain or up in a high tree upon a high mountain watching for some incipient fire. He may be asleep—because foresters have to sleep. That is what these lodges are for. They are not luxuries. They are cheap cabins, in which the foresters, the men engaged in this work—and theirs is a solitary life-may be protected from the snows, the rain, the storms, and the cold.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. I am always pardoning the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I just wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there can be no danger of fire in that country in winter, when the snow and sleet and precipitation come. The fire must come in the summer.

SPOONER. There is danger of fire in that country in

Mr. TILLMAN. There is danger of fire, I suppose, whenever

Mr. SPOONER. Oftentimes the fires have broken out because hunters had not taken due precaution when they have left and broken camp to go somewhere else. My friend from Montana knows, and I know, that when I first went into that country to hunt very little attention was paid to the camp fires and there resulted great harm and great destruction. the forest was a ranging country and men were obliged, under penalty of fine and all that, to extinguish the fires, and extinguish them carefully, because the camps were speedily visited by

These men are few relatively, and the area is very great, and if the forester may not have a station here and there, a little lodge, which the Senator from Indiana would not sleep in, and a telephone

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not objecting to the little lodges, but to this magnificent appropriation which the bill carries of $2,500,000. When you take into consideration the amount that is likely to be received July 1, they can build all of the temporary lodges, all of the cabins, they want.

Mr. SPOONER. How does the Senator know that? Is he very familiar with the details of this business. I can remember a few years ago-

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator will permit me, I have dealt with it as a member of the Committee on Appropriations for a number of years. I know in 1899 we started out and appropriated $175,000. I know that in 1900 we appropriated $175,000. I know that in 1901 we increased it to $300,000. I know that in 1902 we gave them $300,000. I know that in 1903 the appropriation was $300,000. I know that in 1904 it was $375,000. I know that in 1905 it was $375,000. I know, then, that for the year 1906 there was only a million one hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars expended all told, and I feel reasonably certain, in view of the expenditures of the past, that the appropriations in this bill are ample for the proper administration of the forest reserves

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have very great confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Indiana when he understands thoroughly a situation, but the Senator's calculation is a faulty one in this respect, if not in others, that during these years, beginning with $175,000 and going up in three years to $300,000, and then increasing above that, he forgets that there has been a vast increase in the acreage of the forest reserves.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. I understand that, and that is responsible for the increase of appropriations.

SPOONER. Certainly. Not only that, but, Mr. President, it has been possible to systematize the work. been a great deal done in the way of improving streams. has been an immense amount of work done necessary to the conservation of the water supply and necessary to properly safeguard the forests.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Is the forester improving streams?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; he improves the streams where it is necessary to do so in order to preserve the forests. They have to cut out more or less timber to preserve the forests, and that improves the streams.

Mr. HALE. I understand that, but I did not know part of the forester's work was to improve streams, except as streams are improved by the conservation of the water, so that it does not run out.

Mr. SPOONER. That is part of it. They take out the timber that can go to market.

Mr. HALE. Does the Forester dig and dredge and improve the streams so that they come under what those of us who are acquainted with streams know is comprehended in the word "improving streams?" Does he build dams and dredge and take out rocks and all that?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know the details.

Mr. HALE. I should like to know, because if that is the case we are going into a very much larger matter than I sup-

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, from this bird's-eye glance at this business it will be seen that the expenditure has increased undoubtedly with the increase of the service.

Mr. HALE. It would increase enormously if the Forester is going on to take all these other steps. If he is going to improve the streams, it will certainly increase.

Mr. SPOONER. He has to protect the timber, care for the forest, conserve the water supply, and it is of the utmost consequence to the people of the whole region.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

· The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from Wyoming? Does the Senator from Wisconsin

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say in connection with what the Senator is saying about the increase of expenditures that a very large increase has been caused by reason of the Government taking up supervision of the sales of timber for manufactures, etc. Formerly they took care of forests only as against fire under small appropriations. Now there is a corps of men to do the cruising or measuring. Also the trees are all marked before cutting, so that they shall not cut the young and growing trees, and then there must be superintendents while all this cutting of railroad ties and other lumber is going on. This is hardly a part of the expense proper, because the income from lumber pays for it; yet it has increased the number of employees very greatly in the last few years, and we must appropriate accordingly.

Mr. SPOONER. Not only that—
Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is displaying great familiarity with this subject.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no very great familiarity with the details, but for thirty years I lived in a timber country.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is unfortunate for the Senate that he has not been able to speak more connectedly. The discussion has been rather desultory.

Mr. SPOONER. There is more of sarcasm than there is of argument in the Senator's observation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will give us the benefit of his knowledge and tell us how much he thinks we ought to appropriate.

Mr. SPOONER. If I had my way about it-I have so much confidence in the gentleman who has devoted his life to this business and is pursuing it more because he loves it and wants to do it and wants to do good to the country than anything else, and because he is more familiar with it than anyone else, and in whose integrity I have the utmost faith-I would not cut down his estimates unless some good showing was made for that reduction

Mr. HEYBURN. What does the Senator understand the estimate to be?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not remember the estimate. I think it was not excessive, however.

I was about to say, Mr. President, that this service is beginning to produce results. It is beginning to bring money to the Government, and it is estimated that if a system which at once conserves the forests, with all that that implies, and yet brings in financial results to the Government, goes on in the next three years as it has during the last few years then the Department will be self-sustaining. More than that, in the end it will be a profitable Department and that through the saving of timber.

I have seen a million dollars' worth of timber destroyed by a single fire in the northern part of my State, and the effect it had on the water by drying up the streams all over that region was very great. I traveled 60 or 70 miles several years ago was very great. I traveled 60 or 70 miles several years ago along down by the Teton Mountains, under the trees. It was a beautiful ride. My friend from Montana [Mr. Carter] will remember it. We had to cross full streams on our way to Jackson Lake. The last time I was out there the fire had swept over a part of that country and the streams were nearly The snows went earlier.

I believe there is nothing better for us to support, and to support in a liberal way-not in an extravagant way, but in a liberal way-than this work of the conservation of our forests and of the water supply of the country. I believe it will pay in more ways than one.

While I am utterly ignorant of details about it, I know something in a general way upon the subject. I believe it to be a wise expenditure of public money to be fairly liberal about it. If the forestry officials invade the domain of the State, if they intrude into public gatherings and make them-selves offensive, there is a remedy for that; but the remedy is not in the destruction of this work. It is in turning out the men who know no better than to do such a rude thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. I do. Mr. HEYBURN. I wo I would say to the Senator from Wisconsin that one of the most pressing causes of complaint is that Congress invades the rights of the States by making laws that authorize an intrusion upon those rights at the expense of the

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose Congress has a perfect right to make laws to regulate and protect the public property.

Mr. HEYBURN. But not the State's property.
Mr. SPOONER. If the State's property is inside the Government's property, it can not regulate its own property without also in a way regulating the State's property.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then. I would ask whether the Senator thinks, if the State property is inside the Government property, that the Government is authorized to surround the State's property with rules and regulations that render the State's property of no value?

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the question.
Mr. HEYBURN. That is the question.
Mr. SPOONER. The Government certainly has a right to regulate its own property.

Mr. HEYBURN. If in so doing it interferes with the State's property?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. It first has a right to regulate its prop-

Mr. SPOONER. I think if the Government has a great tract of land in the center of which there is a piece of land owned by State, the Government is not thereby precluded or ousted of a constitutional power to protect the timber growing on its own land and to make regulations essential to the conservation of it. even though it thereby interferes with the property of the State incidentally.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is the strangest doctrine that I have ever heard preached. The State has a million acres of land in Idaho inside the forest reserves, and the Senator would defend a policy that would permit the Government officers or agents to so surround State property as to render it valueless, to rent it, and to collect the rent from it and hand it out as though it were a matter of grace or a favor. That is what they are doing. That is what Congress is doing, and that is what we are complaining of.

Mr. SPOONER. I have said nothing which warrants the Senator in saying-

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the present policy in the administration of the forest reserves.

Mr. SPOONER. Cutting of timber on the State property?
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; cutting of timber on the State property and grazing on State property and saying to the State, "We will give you 10 per cent of the gross proceeds."

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is likely the State should be grateful to the Government for doing that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have heard of that kind of charity before. You take possession of a man under the claim that you are better able to run his business than he is, and then say he should be thankful to you for the supervision which you have exercised over his affairs

Mr. SPOONER. How many acres of Government forest-reserve land is there in Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. There are in the United States—
Mr. SPOONER. No; in Idaho.
Mr. HEYBURN. I was going to give the greater and then the lesser. Of forest reserves, as Congress contemplated forest reserves, there are eighteen million and odd acres in Idaho, of which there are 8,000,000 acres upon which there are no trees. I do not know whether the Senator can class that as forest reserve or not, but Mr. Pinchot, under oath in his examination before the House committee, admitted that there were 30,000,000 acres that had no forest on them out of the 131,000,000 acres in the United States.

The Senator does not answer my question. Mr. SPOONER. Of Government timber forest reserve land, how many acres are there in Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. There are 18,000,000 acres, less a million acres that belong to the State, and perhaps 500,000 acres that are included which belong to, or ought to belong to, individuals.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator would preclude the Government from taking care of its 18,000,000 acres, because inside of the 18,000,000 acres there are a million acres which belong to the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. Does the Government—
Mr. HEYBURN. Can you farm a man out of his estate?
Mr. SPOONER. Does the State desire to take over this work from the Government?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator was not here, I think, when that was brought out. The people of the State certainly do. Since I read to the Senate this afternoon a resolution passed by the house of representatives of the legislature of Idaho yesterday, condemning the forest-reserve policy as usurping the State's rights, and upholding the position which I have taken in this matter, I have telegraphed for the vote by which the resolution was passed and have this answer:

Boise, Idaho, February 19, 1907.

W. B. HEYBURN, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution passed by vote of 33 to 7; absent, 11. Negative all Democrats; 4 Democrats voting affirmative. Had all been present, ballot would have been 43 to 8.

W. L. GLEASON.

That expresses the sentiment as to whether the State wants

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that there are people in the West who are opposed to the forest reserves, and who would a great deal rather have these lands thrown open to the market than to be reserved from market, in order that the forest may be protected and conserved. I presume that is more or less so in Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. They want them open to settlement.

Mr. SPOONER. They want them open to settlement.

Mr. HEYBURN. And homestead.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; but the Government is not obliged to open them to settlement.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not?

Mr. SPOONER. There is no law that requires the Government to open them to settlement.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. I want to get through as soon as I can.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will take but a moment, if I will not be considered as encroaching upon the time of the Senator. there not a contract between the Government and the State of Idaho when it created that State that the people of that State and the State as a political organization should have the benefit to be derived from the natural resources within the State? While they nominally belonged to the Government, they were really held by the Government in trust for whom? For the people who are willing to go and take advantage of them. Was not that the contract?

Mr. SPOONER. No. I think when a State is admitted into the Union, and there lies within its boundaries a large amount of Government land, the Federal Government is under no obligation to dispose of those lands except as it chooses. It is at perfect liberty, if their character be such as to warrant it, to withhold them from market in view of a larger public interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. Just one more word and I will not interrupt the Senator again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I just want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what would have been the effect on the State of Wisconsin if the timber lands had been included in forest reserves under the present policy at the time the State was admitted into the Union?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the people of Wisconsin would have liked it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I guess they would not. Mr. SPOONER. But I think if that had been done and the forests of Wisconsin had been conserved and protected-magnificent as they were, they are gone to-day-if they had been protected and cared for it would have been a mighty advantage to those who live on the prairies of. Wisconsin,

But the Senator's argument goes too far. Certainly he does not contend that there is any special obligation upon the part of the Government to dispose of all of its timber lands in Idaho which is not equally applicable to the Government as to its timber lands in all the Western States.

If there rests upon the Government an implied obligation when a Territory is admitted into the Union as a State to throw open all the public lands to settlement, most of the timber lands would have been gathered up by great concerns and monopolies.

That was the result in northern Wisconsin, and that would be the result in Idaho largely.

But if the Senator's argument is good, then as to every Territory in the West admitted into the Union as a State the Gov-ernment agreed impliedly—and ought as a matter of public policy to carry out the agreement—to throw open to settlement, under the homestead laws and other laws, every acre of Government land. If that had been done, there would have been no forest reserves; and I venture to say, from what little I know about it, that the day would come before many years when the people of Idaho and of the other Western States would regret it.

Territory can not grow into a great and prosperous State in a year or two years or three years. It takes time. We have lands owned by the State of Wisconsin, conferred upon the State at the time it was admitted into the Union, covered with timber, which in all the years since the State has not been able to utilize. Why? Because they are surrounded by Indian reservations. There is more than one such case in Wisconsin. The sixteenth section, the school section, in a small way, is the same case put by the Senator from Idaho. Yet the State of Wisconsin has been precisely, in that small way, in the same

It will always happen, it always has happened, although, if I am not mistaken, the State could surrender that land to the United States and take lieu land, could she not?

Mr. HEYBURN. After that I will have to violate my promise not to interrupt the Senator. Our constitution provides that the lands of the State shall be sold only at public auction, after advertisement, and they can not be traded or exchanged or disposed of in any other way.

Mr. SPOONER. Timber land? Mr. HEYBURN. Every particle of land belonging to the State, and Congress ratified that constitution in express terms, and it admitted us on that basis.

There is one view of it which every man who lives in the locality complains of and there is force in it. It is same argument exactly that the settler always makes against a large nonresident ownership of land held out of the market, that it makes the taxes higher for the settler; it interferes somewhat with the development of schools, and all that, and it is a sort of hardship. But, outside of that-and the advantage of the forest reserve is to be put against that-outside of that, these lands, this million acres of land in the heart of this great forest reserve, being taken care of and protected from fire and all that, will be in fifteen years from now worth more money to the school fund of the State of Idaho than anyone would conceive possible, I imagine. The salable timber in Washington, in California, in Idaho, my friend's State, has been taken and is being rapidly cut and manufactured into

Mr. HEYBURN. Through the forest-reserve policy.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; not through the forest-reserve The northern part of my own State twenty years ago was covered with magnificent timber, but it is gone, a large part of it wasted, a great deal of it destroyed by fire because of carelessness in cutting and leaving the underbrush. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] I think would say that they have had the same experience in the timbered part of Minnesota. The same in Michigan. It was waste. It was thought it would last forever, but in a few years it was all gone.

We should go on with this work, not in an extravagant way, but in a reasonable way, and I venture the prophecy that before many years have gone by it will be considered one of the best policies which could have been adopted for the benefit of the States. There may be too many lands established in forest reservations. I do not know about that. If there are millions of acres there without timber, possibly they should be taken out of the forest reserves. I am not speaking of the details, but I am simply speaking upon a principle, and I am expressing my dissent from the notion that you can judge this progressive work, this forestry conservation, if I may so speak, by the annual increase in the expenses of the Departments here in Washington.

I believe Mr. Pinchot prophesied accurately when he said that within three or four years, if he is allowed to continue the work which he has planned, this will be a self-supporting Bureau. If there are wrongs in this situation, and there may be-not his fault, but in the orders of reservation-they can be corrected, because it seems to me the policy can be carried forward without serious injustice to localities.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have sat here all day in the hope, the vain and fleeting hope, that the chemistry section might be reached, in which there is a provision in which I take a great deal of interest, and I have listened attentively to the entire debate. I agree absolutely with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] as to the merits of the forestry policy. It has had my cordial support from the time it was begun. will continue to receive my cordial support. I do not believe the Government has at this time a more accomplished, a more devoted, a better servant than the head of the Forestry Bureau. I think that what is at stake in the Forestry Service concerns the entire people of this country. I should regard it as a dire misfortune if what remains of our forests were left to the tender mercies of the States or the settlers.

It is through the reckless improvidence that has been shown by the States and the settlers in them that our forests have been almost completely destroyed, and that we are within twenty years now of the complete destruction of the great American forests. Therefore, to no one does this Bureau and this policy appeal more strongly than to me.

But, Mr. President, I utterly fail to see why it should be a reflection on any man who is charged with the conduct of the public business to say that the expenditure of great sums of money should only be on estimates and by the appropriation of I do not think that large sums of money, aggregating a million or more, should be put into the hands of any officer of the Government, I care not who he is, President, Secretary of State, or anyone else, to spend as he pleases. I make the same objection to all parts of this bill. In the next provision there is $600,000 given in a lump sum for one man to distribute and spend as he likes. I do not think that that is the way in which the business of the United States should be done. Let us give the most liberal appropriations that can be demanded in reason for all these important bureaus, and especially for forestry, but we ought not to leave it in any man's hands to expend a million dollars of public money exactly as he pleases without estimate and without appropriation.

Now, as to the amount; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] says the question is not whether it is a large expenditure, but whether it is an extravagant expenditure, and I entirely agree. Mr. President, only two years ago the appropria-tion was $375,000. This bill, as it stands, proposes to increase that appropriation tenfold. Are we to be told that it is unreasonable to suggest, when an appropriation is increased ten times within two years, that it seems a very large expenditure? Last year the expenditure was $1,100,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me here?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly,
Mr. ALDRICH. Of that expenditure, $875,000 was for administration expenses, and $300,000 was for permanent improvements; and the Chief Forester, in a statement before the House committee this year, said that was money enough for the running expenses of his Department, but that we ought to spend more money for improvements.

Mr. LODGE. I want to do everything that can in reason be done for the forests and for their proper preservation. Last year we spent less than $1,200,000. Under the bill as it stands now with the reduction made by the Senate and allowing for an estimated balance for the present fiscal year, we are giving the Bureau $2,400,000, more than twice what it had last year. Is that to be called niggardly, and are we to be told that we are crippling the service when for the next year we double the amount of money they had last year? Mr. President, it is absurd on the face of it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for a question. The time is short. Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator upon what basis his assumption-

Mr. LODGE. It has been-

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will listen to my ques-

Mr. LODGE. The time is short. We have to take a recess at 6 o'clock. I have not spoken to-day, and I should like to have the time uninterrupted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator agreed to yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. It is a long period of silence for me, but it has been kept.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for a question, but when the Senator entered upon an explanation, of course I could not yield. have only five minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has not yielded.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I proposed to ask the Senator a question, and he interrupted me before I had given three words of my question.

Mr. LODGE. Ask the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask on what assumption does the Senator make the statement that, starting with an expenditure of $375,000, this bill proposed to increase it tenfold?

Mr. LODGE. If it has been said in this debate to-day once, it has been said fifty times, and the appropriations have been cited over and over again that two years ago the appropriation was $375,000. This bill as it stood, including the estimated amount that was carried forward, carried $3,000,000— $2,900,000—and we cut it down $500,000.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to ask a short question. I should like to ask the Senator if there has not been a great amount of land added to the forest reserves, entailing a very much larger expenditure?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly there has been a great amount added to the forest reserves, but they have not been doubled in one year, and the appropriation as it now stands, now cut down, is more than double. It has been explained, and the figures have been gone over here until I should think no one could fail to understand them. There is a million four hundred thousand dollars in the bill as it now stands-

Mr. CARTER. And over a million in the balance.

Mr. LODGE. And over a million in the balance for the present fiscal year, which is simply given to the Bureau to be spent without detail or accounting.

Mr. President, I should not have spoken at all in this matter if it were not that I do not like to be put in the attitude of crippling the Forestry Service. There is no service in the Government in which I take a greater interest; there is none that I more want to help and support, not only on account of the value of the policy, but on account of my great respect and admiration for the gentleman who is at the head of that Bureau.

But, Mr. President, I do think we ought to have the money received accounted for and appropriated as all other moneys are accounted for and appropriated, and I can not believe that when we give him, as against $1,100,000 last year, $2,400,000 we are treating him in a niggardly fashion; and we are only standing as it is on the grounds of the House provision.

RECESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will take a recess in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Thereupon the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill upon the Calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2993) to ratify an agreement with the Yankton Sioux Indians of South Dakota and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as first in order upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the 10th of last December this bill was read three times and passed, and the vote by which it was passed was afterwards reconsidered.

Mr. CLAY. The bill had better go over, then. The author of it seems not to be here. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without preju-

The bill (H. R. 17833) providing for the administration of the operations of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] to strike out section 5.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without

The bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in

Mr. GALLINGER. As the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] is pending to this bill, and as it is a very important amendment, I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 5965) to establish the plan of a ship canal to be constructed in the Panama Canal Zone, ceded to the United States by the Republic of Panama under the provisions of the treaty promulgated on the 26th day of February, 1904, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over without prejudice. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the object of this evening session will be entirely destroyed if Senators who are interested in the bills do not come here. If every bill that comes up goes over and continues on this Calendar, it may come up at any time when Senators are not here to object and be passed by unanimous consent. I think the idea of this session was that Senators who are interested in bills, who have reported them and find that they are on the Calendar, should come here and look out for them. If we are going through the Calendar and every bill is to remain on it we shall make no progress whatever; we will not clear up the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Sen-

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest that Senators who are present and interested in bills should be allowed to call up such bills.

Mr. HALE. I do not think we can quite do that yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall object to that course.

Mr. HALE. We can go on, and when we come to bills in charge of Senators who are not here I shall ask that they go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the one just reached go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

INFORMATION CONCERNING CROPS BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 6248) to amend section 5501 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been twice read. Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read so that we may see what it is.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX. The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Maine, it will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: I have just entered the Chamber. I understand that Senate bill 6248 has been transferred to the Calendar under Rule IX. I would be very glad if it could remain where it has been, without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. I do not like to disagree with the Senator, but the trouble is if we let these cases remain, which will give rise to debate more or less extensive, as this bill will, they are liable to be reached some time and passed by unanimous consent when Senators who are opposed to them are not present. When a bill goes to the Calendar under Rule IX it can only be taken up by a vote of the Senate. I am so much opposed to this bill that I can not consent that it shall remain where it may be passed by unanimous consent at some time when I am not here. For that reason I asked that it should go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that a bill on the Calendar, even under Rule VIII, is taken up on motion, so that if this bill should remain there

Undoubtedly when it goes to the Calendar Mr. HALE. under Rule IX it can be taken up by motion, but the Calendar under Rule VIII is almost always considered by unanimous consent, and a Senator who is opposed to a bill on that Calendar has to be here always in order to object. I do not object to any bill the Senator believes should be passed, when it goes to the Calendar under Rule IX, being taken up by a vote of the Senate, but I do not think that these controverted cases ought to remain on the Calendar under Rule VIII, where they can be taken up by unanimous consent. That is the object of the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. CULBERSON. Can a single objection to a bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII take it to the Calendar under Rule IX?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the common practice.

CULBERSON. Possibly we could transfer all these bills there.

Mr. HALE. That is, all contested cases, where, I think, they ought to be practically. Rule VIII is the unanimousconsent rule.

Mr. CULBERSON. It was not my purpose, I will state to the Senator from Maine, to ask for the consideration of the bill to-night. We understand each other, as far as that cerned. I did not want it to go to the Calendar under Rule cerned. Even IX, because possibly some time it might be considered. the Senator from Maine might be willing to have it considered.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator obliges me, being opposed to the bill, to be here every time that the Calendar under Rule VIII is considered. I do not think, considering the burden of duties that rests upon some of us, we ought to be asked to do that. I can not be here whenever the Calendar under Rule VIII is considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. We understand that, Mr. President; but because one Senator objects to a bill it ought not to prevent its consideration for an entire session.

Mr. HALE. The Senator always, under Rule IX, has the right to move, when the opportunity offers, that the Senate shall take up a bill; but clearly the rights of Senators who have bills on this Calendar that can be considered by unanimous consent ought not to be obstructed by bills that will receive opposition and which ought to go to the Calendar under

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course, if the objection of a single Senator can take it to the Calendar under Rule IX, and the Senator from Maine insists upon its going there, I can not help myself.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 5951) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

That bill will require some explanation, and Mr. CARTER. the Senator having charge of the bill being absent, I suggest that it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Montana.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL LEE.

The bill (H. R. 850) making appropriation to pay to the legal representatives of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, to wit, Samuel Lee, Anna Lee Andrews, Clarence Lee, Robert Lee, Harry A. Lee, and Phillip Lee, heirs at law, in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. CARTER. That seems to be quite an extensive claim. I suggest that the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX. The Senator who reported it is not present.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

JOHN SCOTT.

The bill (S. 2951) for the relief of John Scott was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no amount shall be allowed which was not deducted from the pay due the soldiers who had died in the service or who had deserted.

So as to make the bill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to examine and settle the claim of John Scott, late sutler Twenty-first Regiment New York Cavalry, for money alleged to be due him by certain enlisted men of the said regiment who had died in the service or who had deserted; and in the examination of said claim the accounting officers are authorized to regard the certificate of the commanding officer of the regiment now on file with the case as equivalent to an entry on the muster roll of the regiment; and a sufficient sum of money to pay the amount found due to John Scott is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay all of said claim not already settled by the United States with the men or their legal representatives: Provided, That no amount shall be allowed which was not deducted from the pay due the soldiers who had died in the service or who had deserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF GEORGE W. SOULE.

The bill (S. 188) for the relief of the legal representatives of George W. Soule was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a memorandum on the bill to the effect that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Bur-KETT] desires to be present when the bill is considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was going to suggest that there is a minority report here, and that the bill had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without preju-

PENSIONS OF ARMY NURSES.

The bill (S. 695) increasing the pensions of army nurses was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go to the Calendar under Rule

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from New Hampshire the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX. DRAINAGE OF SWAMP AND TIDAL LANDS.

The resolution reported by Mr. LATIMER from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry directing the Secretary of Agriculture to submit a report on drainage of swamp, tidal, and overflowed lands, etc., was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that go to the Calendar under Rule IX. . The -VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Maine. ESTATE OF W. W. JACKSON.

The bill (S. 1569) for the relief of the estate of W. W. Jackson, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is there a report in that case?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. CULBERSON. How much is involved?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Six thousand six hundred and thirty dollars

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to the consideration of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without prejudice.

STREET RAILWAY TICKETS.

The bill (S. 826) to amend "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended by the acts approved January 31 and June 30, 1902, relating to the improper issue, sale, gift, or use of transfer tickets of street railroads was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] objected to this bill on a former occasion, and I ask that it may go over. I am sure he would object if he were here

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

INCORPORATION OF BANKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (8, 6906) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia was considered as in Committce of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in section 3, page 3, line 11, after the word "of," to insert "July;" and in line 18, after the date "1890," to insert "any person, firm, or company regularly licensed to engage in the business of private banking in the District of Columbia prior to the 1st day of January, 1906, banking institutions having officers or banking houses in foreign countries, as well as in the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1907, no person, company, association, copartnership, or corporation, except associations organized under the national-bank act, corporations organized under an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia," approved October 1, 1890, any person, firm, or company regularly licensed to engage in the business of private banking in the District of Columbia prior to the 1st day of January, 1906, banking institutions having officers or banking houses in foreign countries, as well as in the District of Columbia, and corporations organized under this act shall transact a banking business or maintain an office or banking house where deposits or savings are received within the District of Columbia. Any person, and any officer or agent of any company, firm, or corporation who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES P. BARNEY.

The bill (H. R. 9877) for the relief of James P. Barney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James P. Barney, late first lieutenant and battalion adjutant of the Third Regiment United States Volunteer Engineers, $247.63, to reimburse him for that amount of public funds stolen from him, without his fault or neglect, in September, 1898, at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., which funds he accounted for and paid over, notwithstanding said loss, to Maj. Willoughby Walke, as required by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

The bill (H. R. 19312) to authorize the Mingo-Martin Coal Land Company to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at or near mouth of Wolf Creek was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 23218) to authorize the Kentucky and West Virginia Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, in Mingo County, W. Va., to a point on the east side of said river in Pike County, Ky., was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY CLERK WALTER DELAFIELD BOLLARD.

The bill (H. R. 7741) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Pay Clerk Walter Delafield Bollard, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTING ASST. SURG. GEORGE R. PLUMMER.

The bill (S. 6447) to authorize the appointment of Acting Asst. Surg. George R. Plummer, United States Navy, as an as-sistant surgeon in the United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole,

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEN V. REED.

The bill (H. R. 7676) authorizing the appointment of Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a commodore on the retired list of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in line 5, after the word "a," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "commodore" and insert "rear-admiral;" and in line 7, after the word "office," to insert "the appointment to date from the 30th day of September, 1898;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, to be a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy, with the rank and pay of said office, the appointment to date from the 30th day of September, 1908.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, how much this bill will increase the pay of this officer, from captain to rear-admiral?

Mr. HALE. Very considerably, Mr. President. Mr. CULBERSON. It seems that he is a captain on the retired list, and the bill as it passed the House was to retire him as commodore, and the amendment of the Senate is to retire him as a rear-admiral. It seems to me that is quite a jump.

Mr. HALE. It is a very great jump. Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that a similar bill passed the Senate precisely as it is now amended, and it was very elaborately discussed. If the Senator had time to read the report which on one occasion was made by myself, I think he would see that this officer was very badly treated and that we ought to do him justice.

Mr. CULBERSON. He is now a captain.
Mr. GALLINGER. There is, of course, no such grade now as commodore. There was originally, but that grade has been abolished. The next grade above captain is that of rear-aumiral.

Mr. HALE. I think if the Senator from Texas has any doubt about the bill it had better go over, at any rate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say further to the Senator that this officer is now practically blind and he is poor. That is no reason why we should pass the bill, except a sentimental reason. It is well enough to mention that he was a very gallant officer and was deprived of his promotion under circumstances that I think he ought not to be held blamable for.

Mr. DANIEL. What pay is he getting now? Mr. GALLINGER. He is retired as a captain.

Mr. DANIEL. What pay does he get now? Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know what that pay is.

Mr. HALE. About three-fourths of $2,800.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to inquire what time the pay starts from under this bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Eighteen hundred and ninety-eight. Mr. GALLINGER. Eighteen hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. HALE. It is a retroactive bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. The statement of the Senator from New Hampshire appeals to me. I am only inquiring with reference to the matter to see what ought to be done in my judgment. It seems that the bill passed the House to retire this officer as a commodore, and the amendment is to retire him as a rearadmiral, which I understand is one grade higher than a commodore, though there is no such office now as that of com-modore in the Navy. I made the inquiry once or twice of those familiar with the subject, but have received no answer so far as to how much per annum this will increase the pay, from captain to rear-admiral.

Mr. HALE. I do not know, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to know what good reason there is for making the bill retroactive. It is an uncommon character of legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not very uncommon, I will say to the Senator, and if he will read the report—
Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can tell me just as well. perhaps.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not tell in a few words. If the Senator wishes to have the report read, it explains it thoroughly. Mr. President, there is a very small number of Senators here to-night, and, if there is objection to the bill, I will ask that it may go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have made no objection; I am simply inquiring about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it had better go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prej-

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that at some time, if opportunity offers, when a larger number of Senators are present, I will, if no one else does, call up the bill and have it once more explained. It was very thoroughly thrashed out on two former occasions, and passed the Senate, I think, unanimously after occasions, and passed the senate, I think, unanimously after it had been considered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will withdraw my objection if the Senator is himself satisfied. I thought he rather gave an invitation to have it go over on account of there being so few present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not.

Mr. DANIEL. I will object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to say, in justice to myself, that I did not invite an objection. My only thought was that there were other bills yet to be considered that other Senators have an interest in, and I did not wish to block their consideration; that is all.

MITSUI BUSSAN KAISHA.

The bill (H. R. 9289) for the relief of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $600 to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their steamer Hikosan Maru, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department on July 31, 1902; and the further sum of $948.27 to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their chartered steamer Shirley, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department in Manila Bay on March 23, 1962, making altogether the sum of $1,548.27.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT ACTS.

The bill (S. 8190) to consolidate and revise the acts respecting copyright was announced as next in order.

Mr. KITTREDGE. That bill is reported by a majority of the Committee on Patents. Views of the minority have been submitted. If there is any objection, I would be very glad if the bill might be read and that certain formal committee amendments to which all are agreed might be acted upon, and then let the bill go over.

Mr. McCUMBÉR. I can see very little use of reading it now, because we shall have to take it up at some other time. It would have to be read over again, and it would be simply wastwould have to be read over again, and it would be simply wasing time. I would not insist, with so few present, on reading it now, and then reading it again some other time.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Of course, I appreciate the fact that a single objection will take it over, but it is quite long, and I think it would save quite a bit of time.

I can say for the benefit of the Senator and of Senators that with the exception of two sections of the bill, so far as the committee is concerned, there is complete accord. It is an important bill, and we are very anxious that it should pass at this session, if there is a possibility so to do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I may be permitted to make an inquiry concerning a similar bill that has been reported in the other House, I will ask the Senator if that bill at all corresponds with this measure?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The bill is in substance exactly like this bill, except in the respect I have indicated as to two sections. In that regard the House bill agrees with the minority and this bill with the majority of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, I take it, does not expect this bill to become a law at the present session.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I had hoped that it, too, might be passed. Mr. GALLINGER. I did not suppose there was any hope of Mr. GALLINGER. that in anyone's mind.

Mr. KITTREDGE. There is always hope.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the copyright bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the copyright bill. Mr. OVERMAN. I object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will state that I object on account of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], who signed the minority report, I understand.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I said, perhaps in the Senator's absence, that I did not expect that the bill would be acted upon and finally passed to-night, stating that as regards two sections of the bill there was a difference in the committee, and with the exception I have stated the committee is in complete accord. I asked that the bill might be read, if there was no objection, and that certain committee amendments of a formal character be acted upon, and then I would ask that the bill be laid aside so that it might be considered as to those sections with a view to the presence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory] when they are considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator from Florida ought to be here when the bill is considered.

Mr. CLAY. I will state that the bill will necessarily lead to considerable debate. I think the Senator will find considerable opposition to it, and it will probably lead to hours of debate.

Mr. HALE. Then it may as well go to the Calendar under

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask that it may retain its place under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the request of the Senator from Maine the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I hope that will not be insisted upon

Mr. HALE. I have not the least interest in the bill, but the objections which have been made disclose that it will be contested and give rise to great debate.

A bill of this kind on the Calendar under Rule VIII ought A bill of this kind on the Calendar under Rule VIII ought not to remain on the Calendar under Rule VIII; it ought to go to Rule IX and be taken up by a vote of the Senate. But under the practice which prevails here, when a Senator makes an objection, not because he has an interest in the bill, but in the interest of public business, he is solicited not to make the objection. I think the Senator must see he never can get this bill through under Rule VIII by unanimous consent.

GROUNDS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 6649) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calen-

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that bill has been already read. Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask that it be read again, Mr. President.

Mr. DANIEL. It is a very important bill. I do not think the Senate is in a condition to discuss a measure so important

The VICE-PRESIDENT, Objection is made.

Mr. HEYBURN, I ask the Senator if he will not withhold his objection a moment, while I make a statement?

Mr. DANIEL. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I only want to say—I think I may safely say—to every Senator that there has been a unanimous demand from his State that this bill should be taken up and enacted at this session.

Mr. DANIEL.

Mr. DANIEL. A unanimous demand from whom?
Mr. HEYBURN. From the newspapers of every State in the Union, which have given the strongest kind of an expression of approval to this measure. I had hopes that it might be taken

Mr. DANIEL. Is the Senator sure that all the editors read this bill and understood exactly what it meant?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it was very generally considered. It is a short bill and one that has received such universal commendation that I felt I might reasonably ask that the Senate

Mr. DANIEL. What is the amount of the appropriation? Mr. HEYBURN. It provides for the purchase of the prop-rty south of Pennsylvania avenue, and it appropriates Mr. DANIEL. $10,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. DANIEL. How many million? Mr. HEYBURN. Ten million. Mr. TILLMAN. It is a small item.

Mr. HEYBURN. It never can be bought for less money than that.

Mr. DANIEL. A night session is not a ten-million session.
Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, but I want to say, inasmuch as the Senator says it is a short bill, that it is a short appropriation, too. It will cost, in my judgment, twice and a half that amount at least.
Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to say, Mr. President, that the passage of this bill rather binds us irrevocably to the scheme of putting up future public buildings on Pennsylvania avenue. That may be right, but it does not appeal to me, and I think that very many reasons could be urged why we should not follow that scheme. While Senators may consider that that is the best thing to do, it certainly would give rise to considerable debate, While Senators may consider that that is the best because it is an important question. I think it would be impossible for the Senator to get that disposed of at this session.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it remain on the Calendar without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over without preju-

DAVID M'CLELLAND.

The bill (H. R. 7153) for the relief of David McClelland for loss sustained at Chickamauga Park, Ga., January 29, 1904, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask to have the report read. I should like to have stated the ground of the liability of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, at the request of the Senator from Virginia.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. Kean on January 31, 1907, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7153) for the relief of David McClelland, for loss sustained at Chickamauga Park, Ga., January 29, 1904, having carefully considered the same, report the same favorably to the Senate and recommend that it do pass, and adopts as its report thereon the House report on the same do pass, and adopts as its report thereon the House report on the same measure.

The House report is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, having considered the bill (H. R. 7153) for the relief of David McClelland, report the same favorably to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

"This bill provides for the payment to Mr. McClelland of the sam of $171.21, for loss of personal property by fire on the morning of January 29, 1904, at the new military post at Chickamauga Park, Ga.; the claimant being late draftsman and assistant to the engineer in the Quartermaster's Department, and upon discovering the fire endeavored to put it out and saved valuable drawings belonging to the Government, was severely burned himself, and meanwhile his own clothes, drawing utensils and materials, and other personal effects were nearly all burned.

"The value which he puts upon his effects seems to be reasonable, and payment thereof is recommended by George E. Pond, Acting Quartermaster-General, United States Army, and by the War Department.

"Official and unofficial papers in the case are hereto attached."

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, March 20, 1996.

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,

Washington, March 20, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith communication of Hon.

James M. Miller, chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, inclosing copy of House bill 7153, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, together with all the papers in the case (and a schedule of same) on file in this office in re claim of David McClelland, a civilian employee of the Quartermaster's Department, for reimbursement for the loss of personal property destroyed by a fire which occurred at the Army post at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, January 28, 1904.

The records show the receipt in this office, November 3, 1904, of a claim filed by Capt. H. W. French, constructing quartermaster, Chattanooga, Tenn., in favor of David McClelland, as above stated.

This claim was investigated by this office, and on November 5, 1904, was returned to Captain French with information that there was represented to Captain French with information that there has character could be paid.

Mr. McClelland was employed in the Quartermaster's Department as a civilian draftsman and assistant engineer, and occupied a room in a frame building on the grounds used by the Government as a storchouse. His room contained a fireplace, in which a fire was kept throughout the day and evening. The building was of light frame construction, built entirely of wood, with yellow-pine partitions.

On the night of January 28, 1904, a fire took place. The flames spread rapidly, and Mr. McClelland endeavored to put out the fire and save valuable drawings, but was unable to do so, and lost all of his clothing and other effects.

From the evidence disclosed this office is of the opinion that the claim is a meritorious one and Mr. McClelland should be reimbursed in the amount claimed.

Respectfully,

amount claimed

Respectfully,

Assistant Quartermaster-General, U. S. Army,

Acting Quartermaster-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 21, 1906.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the within report of the Acting Quartermaster-General, under date of the 20th instant, which is favorable to the passage of the bill.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER, Assistant Secretary of War.

OCTOBER 29, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith claim of David McClelland for property destroyed by fire at the new Army post at Chickamauga Park, Ga.

Very respectfully,

Captain and Quartermaster, United States Army.

The QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY, Washington, D. C.

OCTOBER 12, 1904.

Sin: Replying to your letter of no date, it is requested that the inclosed statement be gotten up in the form of an affidavit and returned to this office in triplicate, when the matter of securing your reimbursement for your loss will be taken up. It is also requested that the inclosed certificate from the surgeon at Camp Thomas be furnished in triplicate.

This matter would have been taken up some time ago but for the fact of not knowing your address.

Very respectfully,

Captain and Quartermaster, United States Army.

Mr. David McClelland.

Mr. DAVID McCLELLAND, Care of Allied Arts Club, 605 St. Paul street, Baltimore, Md.

Hospital, Camp Georgie, January 29, 1904.

I certify herewith that David McClelland, assistant to the engineer, Cloud Springs, Ga., was examined by me and found to have received the following injuries at the fire in office building of the constructing quartermaster, Cloud Springs, Ga., while trying to save Government property, this on or about 1 a. m. January 29, 1904:

Severe burn, right ear; slight burn, scalp; slight burn, left ear; slight burn, right hand, and severe bruise, right foot.

He is not able to perform his duties.

F. Norvall, Contract Surgeon, United States Army.

JANUARY 31, 1903.

I, David McClelland, employed by the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, at the new military post at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, as a draftsman and assistant to the engineer, certify herewith that I have been filling my present position since October I, 1903, during which time I have occupied a room in the building used as the Government office and storehouse in the ground.

The office contains a fireplace, in which during the winter months a fire has been kept throughout the day and evening.

On the night of January 28, at about 9.15. I retired, after seeing that the fire was banked, as was my custom. I immediately fell asleep and awoke about 1 a. m. to find the entire wall above the mantel in flames. My first impulse was to quench the fire, and I rushed through the door leading to the rear room and awakened Private Richard Pahnke, of the Hospital Corps, who occupied this room. He responded to the call with a blanket, and I secured a bucket of water at hand, and together we endeavored to quench the flames, but to no avail.

The building was of light frame construction, built entirely of wood, with thin yellow-pine partitions. The flames spread with great rapidity, and we abandoned the attempt to put out the fire, and I turned my attention to saving some valuable drawings in the office. The original tracing of the plan of the post was pinned to a large drawing board in front of the window facing the street. I selzed the board and carried it to the shelter of an adjoining building about 100 feet distant from the door of the office. I then returned for the purpose of securing some more property and entered the room for this purpose, but the heat was so intense that I was immediately forced to retire, picking up, as I did so, a revolver that lay at the head of my cot, which I fired in the air four times upon reaching the porch; this for the purpose of alarming the occupants of adjoining houses and summonling help. I then attempted to secure the surveying instruments which were in the storeroom adjoining the office, but found door to same locked, so I hastened to the back of the building and entered through the rear door to see if s

Mr. DANIEL. I object to the consideration of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over.

GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG.

The bill (S. 7921) for the relief of George A. Armstrong was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DEPEW and Mr. GALLINGER. The amount is left blank.

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, since the introduction of this bill I have taken the matter up with the Auditor for the War Department, and he states that the pay and emoluments for a captain of cavalry, including servant's allowances, from January 28 to May 30, 1864, both dates included, are $532.45. I ask that that amount be inserted in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. Before the word "dollars," in line 7, it is proposed to insert "five hundred and thirty-two;" and after the word "dollars," to insert "forty-five cents;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George A. Armstrong, late captain Company D. Seventh Michigan Cavairy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $532.45. as pay and emoluments from January 28, 1864, to May 30, 1864, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the report be read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report with the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. There is nothing here to show the liability of the Government that I can see.

Mr. NIXON. I have a letter from the Treasury Department in regard to this matter, and I believe the committee reported unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest that the letter be read.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator to have the letter read so that we may understand what we are doing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT Without chication the Secretary

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 2, 1907.

Hon. George S. Nixon, United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, inclosing a copy of bill S. 7921, for the relief of George A. Armstrong, late captain, Seventh Michigan Cavairy, and asking what amount will be due if said bill is passed, I have the honor to inform you that the pay and emoluments of a captain of cavairy, including servant's allowances, from January 28 to May 30, 1864, both dates included, are $532.45.

Your letter and the copy of the bill which accompanied it are returned herewith.

Respectfully,

B. F. HARPER, Auditor.

Mr. NIXON. Mr. President, in explanation of this, I would say that while Captain Armstrong was dismissed from the service, it appears from the records of the War Department that he made application for restoration thereto, and that his case was referred to a military commission for an investigation and report, which resulted in his acquittal and a recommendation that he be restored to duty. This amount is to cover the time during which he was separated from the service and for which he was never paid.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to know why the Government should pay for the time that he was suspended. He was suspended by a court-martial and the terms of his reinstatement are not related to us. We do not know whether it was an act, in some degree, of clemency. It may have been. We can not tell what the ground is, and we have no information imparted to the Senate showing any liability on the part of the Gov-ernment, nor any equity on the part of the man. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

W. B. SUTTER.

The bill (H. R. 5169) for the relief of W. B. Sutter, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General to allow on the accounts of W. B. Sutter, postmaster at Lindsey, Pa., a credit of $218.19, for postage stamps and money stolen from that post-office by burglars March 15-16, 1898.

Mr. CLAY. Is there a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in regard to that bill? I do not recall that any action has been taken by the committee on it. I may be mistaken about it, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I shall not object if there is a report.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill be again read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that bill recommended by the Post-Office Department?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is recommended by the Post-Office Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a letter from the Post-master-General embodied in the report of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Recommending the passage of this bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter of the Postmaster-General in the report of the committee.

The Secretary read as follows:

Office of the Postmaster-General,

Washington, D. C., January 29, 1907.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 25th instant, transmitting bill (H. R. 5169) for the relief of W. B. Sutter, postmaster at Lindsey, Pa., and requesting my opinion as to its merits.

as to its merits.

It appears from the records of this Department that Mr. Sutter filed a claim for credits aggregating the amount mentioned in the bill, on account of loss resulting from the burglary of his office March 15, 1898, and that the claim was disallowed by Postmaster-General Smith, for the reason that the stamps and funds stolen were taken from a safe, the "combination" of which had not been changed by the postmaster as required by the regulations of the Department, and the outer door of which was opened by the burglars without resort to the use of force.

Subsequently affidavits were presented to Postmaster-General Payne, from which, as appears from his letter to Hon. Joseph V. Graff, dated March 2, 1904, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, he was convinced that the loss in question did not result from fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster, and that relief could properly be granted by the Congress. I see no reason to dissent from his view of the matter.

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU, Postmaster-General.

Hon. Boies Peneose, Chairman Committee on Post-Offices, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and yet I never before heard of that bill. It may have been acted on in my absence, but, under the circumstances, I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the objection of the Senator from Texas, the bill will go over, without prejudice.

Mr. SPOONER. What becomes of bills to which objection is made, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They go over without prejudice, and they remain on the Calendar, under Rule VIII.

Mr. SPOONER. If they do not go over without prejudice, as understand it, they go to the Calendar under Rule IX?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the request is made that they go to the Calendar under Rule IX, they are so transferred.

BARCLAY H. WARBURTON.

The bill (H. R. 3577) for the relief of Barclay H. Warburton as considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to was considered as in Committee of the Whole. appropriate $1,079 for the purpose of reimbursing Barclay H. Warburton, of Philadelphia, Pa., for revolvers, holsters, and cartridge boxes furnished by him to the United States Government while serving as captain of Light Battery A, National Guard of Pennsylvania, for the equipment of that company during the war with Spain, etc.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a report with that bill? The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report with the bill. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILBURN WAGON COMPANY, OF TOLEDO, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 5195) for the relief of the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo, Ohio, $1,150, being the balance of an amount justly due said company for the construction and delivery of 100 Army wagon beds, under a contract for the same entered into between that company and the Quartermaster-General of the Army during the year 1903.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have that bill explained, Mr. President, so we may know what it is. I dislike to object to the bill if I do not know what it is.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I can state what the bill is. The Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo, Ohio, had a contract to make 100 wagon beds. The contract was awarded to them upon a bid. It was discovered after the bidding was over that a mistake had been made in the making of the bids. The War Department thereupon, however, requested the Milburn Wagon Company, under the necessities of the situation, to go ahead with the contract, advising them that they would recommend that a bill be passed by Congress to give them relief to cover the difference between the amount of the bid and the actual cost. They went ahead on the assurance of the Department. There were 100 wagon beds delivered, and this bill is to reimburse the company for the actual cost to which they were subjected in making and delivering those wagon beds. They were without fault in the matter, and immediately notified the Department. There is a report accompanying the bill showing the facts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or dered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS BERNICE FARRELL.

The bill (H. R. 8078) for the relief of Miss Bernice Farrell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Miss Bernice Farrell, of St. Paul, Minn., the sum of $400, which sum was erroneously paid by her for the entry of public lands in the local land office of the Duluth (Minn.) district, on November 25, 1903, which entry was subsequently relinquished by her at the request of officers of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it would be just as well and quite as polite to strike out the word "Miss" in the bill before the name

Bernice Farrell."

Mr. TILLMAN. It being a House bill, such an amendment would send it to conference.

Let it go.

Mr. SPOONER. That is so. Let it go. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF M. A. PHELPS AND JOHN W. RENNER.

The bill (H. R. 12009) for the relief of the heirs at law of M. A. Phelps and the heirs at law of John W. Renner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $416.20, to be paid into the registry of the United States district court in bankruptcy for the southern district of Ohio, western division, to be used and disposed of under the direction of the United States district judge in Cincinnati, Ohio, to be applied in the payment of final dividends as follows: In case No. 1100 in bankruptcy in said United States district court in the matter of the involuntary bankruptcy of Benjamin Homans, jr., to the personal representatives of M. A. Phelps, deceased, $315; to the personal representatives of John W. Renner, $101.20; such amounts having been, by misapprehension, paid the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSCAR FULGHAM.

The bill (H. R. 19493) to reimburse Oscar Fulgham, exsheriff of Madison County, Ala., for judgment and costs rendered against him when acting in the service of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $434.55 to Oscar Fulgham, ex-sheriff of Madison County, Ala., to reimburse him for judgment and costs rendered against him by the State courts, resulting from his action while he was sheriff of Madison County, Ala., in recovering three mules, at the request of General Coppinger, who was in the command of the Federal troops stationed at Huntsville, Ala., during the winter of 1898 and 1899, which were stolen from the corral at the camp of the troops stationed at Huntsville, Ala., during the winter of 1898 and 1899.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL AND DR. A. E. BOOZER.

The bill (H. R. 7746) for the relief of Columbia Hospital and Dr. A. E. Boozer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $125 to pay the claim of the Columbia Hospital, of the city of Columbia, S. C., and Dr. A. E. Boozer, of said city, for nursing, board, and medical attention to Henry Hofar, a civilian teamster of the United States Army, in that city for the period extending from November 7 to December 12, 1898, at the request of Brigadier-General Cole, of Third Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, United States Army.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no provision contained in this bill for a division between the hospital and Doctor Boozer. Is it proposed to divide the sum equally?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know anything about how they divide it. I suppose they settle that. Perhaps Doctor Boozer is the physician of the hospital.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-dered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSSES BY FIRE AT ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The bill (H. R. 11676) for the relief of persons who sustained property damage caused by fire at the Rock Island Arsenal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAMILTON D. SOUTH.

The bill (H. R. 1078) for the relief of Hamilton D. South, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, was considered second neutenant, United States Marine Corps, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Hamilton D. South, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, $1,157, to be a payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the marine barracks at Pensacola Navy-Yard on the 21st day of December, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW AND MINOR SON OF CAPT. CHARLES W. DAKIN, AND OTHERS. The bill (H. R. 15909) to reward the widow and minor son of Capt. Charles W. Dakin and the widow and minor children of Thomas J. Hennessy, late of the San Francisco fire department, who lost their lives while fighting a fire on board of the United States Army transport Meade, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from South Dakota, the bill will go over.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will listen to the reading of the letter written to the Military Secretary by General Funston, commanding the Department of California, before objecting. If he then objects to it, I will have nothing more to say.

Mr. CARTER. Let the bill be first read through, Mr. President.

Mr. PERKINS. It will appeal to us very strongly. The bill has passed the House of Representatives without objection.

Mr. CARTER. Let the Senator from South Dakota withdraw his objection and let the bill be read through.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have no objection to the bill being read, if it is the desire of Senators. I think it is only fair to state, however, that after the bill is read I shall interpose an objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like very much to have the letter of General Funston read.

Mr. CARTER. Let us see what the bill is first. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California requests the reading of the letter of General Funston. Is there objection?

I will say in addition that the bill has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I think I should state again that I object

Mr. PERKINS. Let the whole report be printed.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The entire report will be printed in the RECORD without being read, if there is no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has as a report. What is the use of duplicating it in the Record?

Mr. PERKINS. The use of doing it is that these men in defense of the property of the United States gave their lives. They have left wives and three little children, each from 1 to 4 years of age. The military Department of California, commanded by General Funston, has asked and recommended this appropriation. The War Department has recommended it. The fire department of San Francisco has recommended it; and as the Senator from South Dakota objects to the passage of the bill or its consideration at this time, the least he can do is to consent that the record of the heroism of these men who gave their lives in defense of the property of this Government shall go into the RECORD, and I insist upon that.

Mr. SPOONER. I see that the bill is recommended by the Acting Secretary of War; by General Funston; by the Quartermaster-General, and by General Bate, Lieutenant-General, Chief of Staff.

Mr. PERKINS. And also by the Assistant Secretary of War,

Mr. Oliver.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California that the entire report of the committee be printed in the RECORD without reading? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. Fulton January 31, 1907, is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15909) to reward the widow and minor son of Capt. Charles W. Dakin and the widow and minor children of Thomas J. Hennessy, late of the San Francisco fire department, who lost their lives while fighting a fire on board of the U. S. Army transport Meade, having had the same under consideration respectfully report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The report of the House Committee on Claims, which is hereto attached and made a part hereof, quite fully states the facts on which the claim is based.

The House report is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15909) entitled "A bill to reward the widow and minor son of Capt. Charles W. Dakin and the widow and minor children of Thomas J. Hennessy, late of the San Francisco fire department, who lost their lives while fighting a fire on board of the U. S. Army transport Meade," report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

"Capt. Charles W. Dakin and Thomas J. Hennessy lost their lives while bravely fighting a fire on board of the U. S. Army transport Meade on the night of January 31, 1906. By their heroism and bravery they helped to save Government property of great value, although in so doing they were overcome by smoke and gases in the hold of the ship and fell dead at their post of duty. ROBERT SHAW OLIVER, "Acting Secretary of War.

"Hon. Julius Kahn, "House of Representatives."

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL,
San Francisco, Cal., February 12, 1906.

Sir: During the disastrous fire that occurred on board the United States Army transport Meade, lying at her wharf in this city, early on the morning of the 1st instant, two members of the San Francisco fire department, Charles Dakin and Thomas J. Hennessy, lost their lives. These men, with a number of their comrades, had gone down into the hold of the ship and were making a heroic fight against the fire when they were overcome by smoke and gases and perished.

They met their deaths not from some untoward accident, but solely as a result of their heroism in sticking to their post in the presence of great and evident danger. Both left families in absolutely destitute circumstances—Dakin a widow, Frances Dakin, and a son 12 years of age, and Hennessy a widow, Ellen J. Hennessy, and three children, 4, 2, and 1 years of age, respectively.

While it is recognized that the families of these men have no legal claim against the United States, I desire to submit that it would be a very proper and graceful thing for Congress to recognize their heroic services by removing their families from the fear of want in the immediate future by an appropriation of $10,000 for the relief of the widow of each of the men named. The San Francisco fire department has on several occasions rendered highly valuable service during fires on the military reservations immediately contiguous to this city, and the present occasion gives an opportunity for the Government to recognize their services in a highly appropriate manner.

Very respectfully,

**Frederick Funston**,

**Brigadier-General**, Commanding.**

FREDERICK FUNSTON,
Brigadier-General, Commanding.

THE MILITARY SECRETARY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 20, 1906.

Respectfully returned to The Military Secretary.

While I know of no precedent of Congressional action in cases similar to those herein mentioned, I agree with General Funston in his remarks that it would be a very proper act for Congress to recognize the services of the two San Francisco firemen who lost their lives while fighting the fire on the Army transport Meade on February 1, 1906, either by making a generous appropriation for the benefit of their families or granting a pension to their widows.

I therefore recommend that this matter be submitted to the Secretary of War with recommendation that it be brought to the attention of Congress and favorable action thereon taken.

C. F. Humphrey,

C. F. Humphrey, Quartermaster-General United States Army. [Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,

Respectfully submitted to the honorable the Secretary of War, concurring in the recommendations of General Funston and the Quartermaster-General.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF FIRE COMMISSIONERS, San Francisco, February, 7, 1996.

Hon. E. A. Hayes, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On February 2, 1906, the board of fire commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, in regular session assembled, adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, on February 2, 1906, while engaged in the voluntary and purely patriotic service of saving one of our nation's transports, the Meade, from destruction by fire, two of the gallant members of this department heroically gave up their lives: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the board of fire commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco does hereby place on record its testimonial to the bravery of Capt. Charles W. Dakin, of engine company No. 4, and Hoseman Thomas J. Hennessy, of engine company No. 22, and its sense of the loss to the department through the death of these two men; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of this commission extend to the families of the deceased its condolence in their bereavement; and be it further lies of the deceased its condolence in their bereavement; and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this board that it would be eminently proper and just for Congress to recognize the bravery and gallantry of the deceased by making some provision for their afflicted widows and orphaned children, and the president of this board, together with the chief engineer of the department, are herewith authorized and requested to make such representations to the National Government, through Congressmen Julius Kahn and E. A. Haxes, of the Fourth and Fifth Congressional districts, as may best serve to bring needed relief to the distressed and afflicted families."

In accordance with said resolution the undersigned respectfully bring to your attention the facts which led to the adoption of the resolution and the propriety of action by the Federal Government in the premises. On Wednesday, January 31, a fire occurred upon the transport Medde, lying at the United States transport pier in the Bay of San Francisco. Notwithstanding the fact that the fire was outside of municipal jurisdiction, both as to the site of the fire and the location of the vessel, the fire department of San Francisco, with its usual bravery and heroism, responded to the call for aid and subdued the flames with much attendant danger and difficulty. In so doing, notwithstanding the exercise of the utmost care, the stifling fumes arising from the burning hold extinguished the lives of the two brave men whose names appear in the resolution, the subaltern losing his life in the vain endeavor to rescue his lution, the subaltern losing his life in the vain endeavor to rescue his superior.

No more commendable acts of courage than those performed by these two men are recorded in the annals of local history.

Their death leaves dependent on public support two widows and four little children, entirely destitute of this world's goods. A charitable response has been made by the people of San Francisco for the temporary alleviation of their condition.

It would seem, under the circumstances, especially justifiable and proper to ask the Government of the United States to make some provision for the families of these deserving men, not only for the actual necessities which inspire this communication, but also as an encouragement for further and future deeds of valor on the part of the ever self-sacrificing membership of this department.

Therefore we respectfully, but earnestly, request you in suitable manner to present these suggestions to the proper authorities for attention and consideration.

Thanking you in advance for your courteous compliance with our request, we are, on behalf of the fire department of the city and county of San Francisco,

Very respectfully, yours.

President Board of Fire Commissioners.

JOHN AND DAVID WEST.

The bill (H. R. 18865) for the relief of John and David West was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John and David West, of Cathlamet, Wahkiakum County, State of Washington, $88.50, as a reimbursement in full for all damage to their dock or wharf in the Columbia River at Cathlamet accidentally inflicted by the United States dredge W. S. Ladd in the month of December, 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 7143) directing the Postmaster-General to credit John A. Bingham, late postmaster at Vandalia, Ill., in the sum of $500 on account of stamps lost by burglary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the report be read, if it is not long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. Hor-kins January 31, 1907, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have considered the bill (S. 7143) directing the Postmaster-General to credit John A. Bingham, late postmaster at Vandalia, Ill., in the sum of $500 on account of stamps lost by burglary.

The bill has not the approval of the Post-Office Department, as will appear by the annexed letter, but the committee is of the opinion that as precedents have been established to relieve postmasters who have experienced similar losses the same course should be pursued in this case, and therefore recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to the consideration of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without preju-

ANNA B. MOORE.

The bill (S. 7922) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. Hopkins January 31, 1907, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7922) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it be amended as follows:

In line 6, after the word "thousand," strike out the words "eight hundred and fifty-two" and insert "ninety-two," so that the bill as amended will read "one thousand and ninety-two dollars;" and that the bill, thus amended, pass,

The bill as amended has the approval of the Post-Office Department, as will appear by the following letter:

"Post-Office Department,
"Office of the Postmaster-General,
"Washington, D. C., January 26, 1907.

"Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, inclosing copy of bill (S. 7922) 'To reimburse Anna B. Moore, postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance,' and requesting an opinion regarding its merits.

"The post-office at Rhyolite was established in June, 1905, and owing to the rapid increase in the receipts, became Presidential on October 1, 1906. The $1,852 claimed by Mrs. Moore represents the amount paid by her for clerical assistance from September 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, while the office was of the fourth class.

"Under date of October 20, 1905, the postmaster applied to the Department for an allowance effective October 1, 1905, sufficient to enable her to employ one clerk. On January 10, 1906, she renewed her application, suggesting that the allowance be made effective November 1, 1905.

partment for an allowance effective October 1, 1905, sufficient to enable her to employ one clerk. On January 10, 1906, she renewed her application, suggesting that the allowance be made effective November 1, 1905.

"The only appropriation available for the payment of clerical assistance at the Rhyolite office during the period mentioned was the appropriation for 'unusual business at third and fourth class post-offices.' That appropriation, however, was so far depleted at the time the postmaster at Rhyolite made an application for an allowance that the Department found it impracticable to allow but $30, effective April 1, 1906, to cover the months of April, May, and June, 1906.

"The conditions obtaining at Rhyolite during the nine months when the postmaster made the payments for which she asks reimbursement were extraordinary and the need for clerical assistance was undoubtedly an urgent one, and notwithstanding that the conditions at fourthclass offices are frequently such that the postmaster is obliged to use a portion of his or her own salary to maintain the service, it is hardly reasonable to expect that the postmaster at Rhyolite, whose compensation was derived from cancellations and could not exceed in amount $1,000 per annum, should employ assistance costing at the rate of not less than $4 per day, as was necessary, according to the correspondence on file in the Department both from the postmaster and from the field representative of the Department, whose station is in that section of the country. But it is difficult to determine the precise amount to which the postmaster is justly entitled. Inasmuch as the postmaster at no time during the nine months involved suggested the necessity for employing more than one clerk, and as late as May 25, 1906, mentions the fact that she had employed one since October, 1905, it is believed that the claim should be reduced to the equivalent of $4 per day from October 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, which would amount to $1,092. This would be in addition to the $30 allowed b

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4271) for the relief of Patrick J. Madden, having considered the same report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The features of this bill are fully set forth in Report No. 4192 of the House of Representatives, herewith appended, and which is made a part of this report, the Post-Office Department being unable to sup-ply additional information, as will be seen by the accompanying com-munication from the Postmaster-General.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communications of the 25th and 29th instant, relative to bill (H. R. 4271) for the relief of Patrick Madden, a clerk in the Cambridgeport station of the post-office at Boston, Mass.

All the information material to the case in the possession of this Department is embraced in the printed reports in the possession of your committee, and inasmuch as the loss sustained by Mr. Madden is not one for which existing statutes provide any relief, I do not feel warranted in expressing any opinion as to the merits of the bill.

HOLTZER-CABOT ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 14381) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Holtzer-Cabot Electric Company the amount due said company from the Post-Office Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $4,656 to the Holtzer-Cabot Electric Company, of Brookline, Mass., being the balance due the company from the Post-Office Department for electric motors sold that Department

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the report of the Department? Is the bill recommended by the Department?

Mr. SPOONER. The Postmaster-General says:

The claim is without doubt a just one and would have been paid long ago had not the appropriation been exhausted. The company furnished the motors in good faith and rendered direct to the Department a bill for each at the time of shipment to the office for which it was intended. These bills were allowed to accumulate during the period above mentioned instead of being ordered paid when received, as is the customary practice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

The bill (S. 825) to authorize street railway companies in the District of Columbia to convey small freight, express matter, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. Is there any limitation as to the hours during which this traffic may progress?

Mr. GALLINGER. There are amendments, I will say to the Senator, which will be reported. The bill has been very carefully considered.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in line 7, before the word "cars," to insert the words "between the hours of 12 o'clock midnight and 5 o'clock antemeridian;" and at the end of the bill to insert the following proviso:

Provided. That the operation of said cars in the conveyance of such small freight, express matter, and fuel shall be subject to regulations prescribed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make such regulations and to attach such penalties thereto as they may deem necessary to enforce the observance thereof.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the street railway companies in the District of Columbia are authorized to operate over their tracks cars for the purpose of conveying small freight and express matter, and between the hours of 12 o'clock midnight and 5 o'clock a. m. cars for the conveyance of fuel to be used in the operation of power plants furnishing power for the propulsion of cars: Provided, That the operation, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARPSWELL STEAMBOAT COMPANY, PORTLAND, ME.

The bill (H. R. 4233) to reimburse the Harpswell Steamboat Company, of Portland, Me., for expenses incurred and for repairing damages sustained by its steamer 'Sebascodegan in collision with the U. S. S. Woodbury was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Harpswell Steamboat Company, of Portland, Me., $2,016.25 for expenses recurred and for receiving damages systained by its steamer. incurred and for repairing damages sustained by its steamer Sebascodegan in collision with the U. S. S. Woodbury, July 18, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. RAY, ASSIGNEE OF JOHN GAFFORD.

The bill (H. R. 7960) for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of the Whole. It appropriates $853.25 for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, deceased, mail contractor on route No. 7956, in the State of Arkansas, for carrying the United States mails to May 31, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. BIERTEMPFEL.

The bill (H. R. 12840) for the relief of L. Biertempfel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill. It seems to be an extraordinary bill.
Mr. GALLINGER. It is a long report, and I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

M. D. WRIGHT AND ROBERT NEILL.

The bill (H. R. 5622) for the relief of M. D. Wright and Robert Neill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the beneficiaries named $60 to reimburse them for a like amount of money deposited May 26, 1903, in the Boise City National Bank to the credit of the United States to cover cost of survey of Waterloo and Victoria placer-mining claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. H. HENRY.

The bill (H. R. 9109) for the relief of J. H. Henry was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the report in the case be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr.

Fulton on the 1st instant.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a very long report. Let the bill go

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina the bill will go over without prejudice.

EDWIN T. HAYWARD, EXECUTOR, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12686) for the relief of Edwin T. Hayward, executor of Columbus F. Hayward and the administrator of Charlotte G. Hayward, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Edwin T. Hayward, executor of the last will and testament of Columbus F. Hayward, deceased, $714, and to Edwin T. Hayward, administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of Charlotte G. Hayward, deceased, $939, in payment of damages to land belonging to Columbus F. Hayward and Charlotte G. Hayward, respectively, which was washed away and overflowed by reason of the extension of end of Dam No. 4 in the Muskingum River in the month of July, 1890.

Let the bill go over.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill. This is a case where the Government took possession of a man's property and built a dam on it. They certainly ought to pay for it. It has been through the Court of Claims and has been in all the Departments. It is recommended by every offi-cial who has had anything to do with it. There is an explicit finding of fact on every point.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator himself has carefully examined the claim and thinks it ought to be paid, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. FORAKER. I have. I would not ask it if I did not feel that it was proper that it should be paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKWAY ALONG PINEY BRANCH.

The bill (H. R. 129) for the opening of a connecting parkway along Piney Branch, between Sixteenth street and Rock Creek Park, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill seems to be indefinite. quire of the chairman of the committee how much this bill involves?

Mr. CLAY. Six hundred dollars is proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, but what will be required to reimburse the landowners for the land to be condemned? It is not certain how much money is involved.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can not state definitely about it at the present time. I do not know the extent of the land.

It can be bought at the present time at a very cheap price. It is an extremely desirable opening to the park, and the Com-The bill (H. R. 7960) for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, of Arkansas, was considered as in Committee that the committee of the House—I have that information from the chairman-examined it personally. The committee of the Senate gave it perhaps not very careful consideration, for the reason that it had been recommended by the Commissioners and the House committee had given it personal examination. think it will involve quite a little sum of money. It can be bought for $2,500 an acre. I have an impression that the expenditure will be in the vicinity of probably $60,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I believe I will object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will lie over.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that this is an almost indispensable approach to the

Mr. GALLINGER. It is. Mr. CARTER. And it will undoubtedly cost more next year than this year and more the year after than the next year. It is a matter of economy, I think, to institute proceedings. Congress can later take up the matter of payment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will not further object to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETENT ON CONTRACTS WITH THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 21684) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act regulating the retent on contracts with the District of Columbia," approved March 31, 1906, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and it was read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Unless the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, thinks there is some necessity for action on this bill to-night, as it is a general bill, I shall object to its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that at the last session we passed a bill, as I recall it, relieving contractors from a deposit being made on contracts relating to buildings under $500, the Commissioners saying that there was no difficulty in making satisfactory arrangements and that there could not possibly be any loss. As I understand it, this is simply a provision that they shall have the same privilege in respect to the construction of bridges, sewers, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator think it important to consider this measure to-night?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that it is important, I will say to the Senator. I presume we will get along if it is not considered at the present session.

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will lie over without probables.

lie over without prejudice.

Ile over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: The Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] made an objection to the bill (H. R. 21684) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act regulating the retent on contracts with the District of Columbia," approved March 31, 1906, which he is good enough to withdraw. It is in one sense an inconsequential bill, but the Commissioners are anxious to have it passed, and I ask that it be considered.

Mr. CARTER. The bill has been read.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

The bill (H. R. 23201) to amend the act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOPYING OF OLD RECORDS.

The bill (H. R. 22350) to authorize the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to recopy old records in his office, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABANDONED ROADWAYS.

The bill (S. 7526) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close and abandon roadways in said District outside of the city of Washington, and to transfer the title of the United States in said roadways to abutting owners, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close and abandon roadways in said District outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.'

JAMES CARROLL.

The bill (S. 5888) authorizing the President to appoint James Carroll on the retired list with the rank of major was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if this man Carroll is in the Army now? The proposition is to retire him as a major. I wish to know if he is in the Army now or if he has any connection with the Army?

Mr. CLAY. The author of the bill is not present. I think it had better go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not ask that the bill shall go over, but I should like to know something about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator who reported the bill is not present.

Mr. SPOONER. He is referred to as Lieutenant Carroll, assistant surgeon, and is said to be still on the pay roll. He is the officer who submitted himself to test in Cuba as to the effect of the mosquito in conveying yellow fever, and acquired the disease.

I think the bill ought to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Virginia the bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done—I do not find the report in this case, but as I remember, Doctor Carroll rendered very conspicuous service in the matter of yellow fever in connection with the late discovery that the mosquito conveyed the yellow-fever virus.

Mr. SPOONER. And he offered himself for experiment to

Mr. SPOONER. And he offered himself for experiment to demonstrate the transmission of yellow fever by the mosquito. Mr. GALLINGER. He offered himself, as stated by the Senator. We have given a large gratuity, I think, to the widow of Doctor Reed, who lost his life in the same service. This is a matter about which a great many physicians have written to me, and while I do not find the report and am not familiar with the circumstances, I have a general knowledge of it, and I think it is a matter, that outlet to expect to we appeal to we as below of I think it is a matter that ought to appeal to us as being at least just.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me a moment? The report states that he is 52 years of age and is an officer in the Army and is getting along very well. I do not see why he should be retired.

Mr. SPOONER. It was recommended that he be retired. The Surgeon-General says:

He is, in my opinion, far too valuable a man to be placed on the retired list, as provided by this bill. I recommend, therefore, that the bill be passed, so amended as to give Doctor Carroll the grade of major on the active list.

Secretary Taft especially recommends it as a proper bill to be

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out:

Surgeon, with the rank of major, in the Medical Corps of the Army, and that the number of officers in the Medical Corps be increased by one, with the rank of major, for this purpose.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint James Carroll, lieutenant-surgeon, United States Army, and curator of the Army and Navy Museum, a surgeon, with the rank of major, in the Medical Corps of the Army, and that the number of officers in the Medical Corps be increased by one, with the rank of major, for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President to appoint James Carroll a surgeon, with the rank of major, in the United States Army."

AGRICULTURAL BANK IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The bill (S. 6249) to provide for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I am anxious to send something to the Calendar under Rule IX to-night, and I ask that this bill may go to that Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Texas, the bill goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

J. M. BLOOM.

The bill (S. 7851) for the relief of J. M. Bloom was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments, in line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "eighty-nine dollars and twelve" and insert "eighteen dollars and eighteen;" and on page 2, line 5, before the word "cents," to strike out "eighty-nine dollars and twelve" and insert "eighteen dollars and eighteen;" so as to make the bill pred; "so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of J. M. Bloom, late postmaster at Clearfield, State of Pennsylvania, to be credited with the sum of $118.18, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of loss of $12.3 in postal funds by robbery of said post-office on the 10th day of February, 1897, and $66.12 for expenses incurred in the effort to apprehend the burglars, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said late postmaster; and the sum of $118.18 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a report with the bill?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.
Mr. SPOONER. Is it a lengthy report?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not very. Does the Senator wish to have it read?

Mr. SPOONER. Just a little of it. If there is any recommendation from the Department, that is what I want.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. Simmons, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on the 4th instant the following:

Office of the Postmaster-General,

Washington, D. C., January 23, 1967.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 19th instant, transmitting bill (S. 7851) for the relief of J. M. Bloom, late postmaster at Clearfield, Pa., and to transmit herewith a statement prepared in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for this Department, setting forth the facts connected with the burglary of the said post-office, from which the reasons for the fallow Mr. Bloom the entire amount claimed to have been lost by the burglary will fully appear.

The records of the Department fail to furnish any information of value concerning the claim for reimbursement of expenses incurred in the effort to apprehend the burglars, the papers in the case having been referred to the inspector in chage at Philadelphia. Your letter has therefore been referred to the chief post-office inspector for the purpose of ascertaining whether any voucher for such expenditures can be found, and upon receipt of his report you will be further advised on the subject.

Very respectfully,

George B. Cortelyou,

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,

In re J. M. Bloom, postmaster, Clearfield, Pa.

Claim for credit on account of loss by burglary, February 10, 1897. as follows Postal funds

BRIEF.

It appears from the evidence in this case that on the date mentioned, at about 3 a. m., the post-office was forcibly entered by burglars, who blew open the postmaster's safe, from which they took the postal and money-order funds for which credit is claimed, besides postage stamps of the value of $1,103.28; the stamps were subsequently found and returned to the postmaster.

The postmaster's statement, intended to show how the amount of postal funds stolen was determined, is incoherent and does not serve, the purpose for which it is intended, but the report of the inspector who investigated the matter shows that $43 is the amount stolen.

There is no reason to doubt that the amount of money-order funds stolen is as claimed, but it appears that the greater part of the amount should have been previously remitted for deposit. At the close of business Monday, February 8, 1897, there were on hand money-order funds to the amount of $226.18, and as the postmaster was allowed an "irrespective reserve" of $75, he should have remitted on the following day all over and above such reserve, or $151; and had such remittance been made the amount on hand at the time of the burglary would have been but $49, as payments made on the following day reduced the amount on hand to $200.18; but as he was authorized to maintain his reserve at $75, and could have done so by making payments from his postal funds, it is but just to admit that $75.18 were properly on hand at the time of the burglary.

Aside from the failure to make prompt remittance of surplus funds there was no fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster, and he should be allowed credit as follows:

WALES ISLAND PACKING COMPANY.

The bill (S. 616) authorizing and directing the Secretary of State to examine and settle the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand that bills going over go to the Calendar under Rule IX or do they retain their places?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They retain their places unless a request is made that they go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] laid down the idea at the beginning that we were trying to clear the Calendar and get rid of all matters calculated to excite debate or cause a Senator to be watching here all the time; but it looks like we have forgotten what we started out to do.

Mr. HALE. No; any Senator who insists that a bill shall go to the Calendar under Rule IX can have it go there, but in case a Senator does not insist upon that it simply remains on the Calendar.

Mr. CULBERSON. I trust that my proposition to have Calendar No. 5939, the Philippine bank bill, go to the Calendar under Rule IX has not been overlooked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has gone to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the special request that I made.

Mr. HALE. That bill has gone to the Calendar under Rule

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not want any doubt about it.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT CHALMETTE, LA.

The bill (S. 8292) providing for the completion by the Secretary of War of a monument to the memory of the American soldiers who fell in the battle of New Orleans, at Chalmette, La. and making the necessary appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was included as an item in the Army appropriation bill. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. It had better be taken off the Calendar.

SNARE & TRIEST COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 18020) for the relief of the Snare & Triest

Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. What committee was the bill reported from?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It came from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the amount involved?
Mr. McCUMBER. It simply refers a claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that all? Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. refers to the Court of Claims the claim of the Snare & Triest Company for reimbursement for loss and damage to barge, tools, and machinery, resulting from a collision with the U. S. S. Colorado on the night of February 9, 1905, at the League Island Navy-Yard.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

It appears to me that there should be some provision whereby letters of administration should be issued and the fact of heirship judicially determined.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill go over.
Mr. CARTER. I do not know what the practice is here, but it appears to me rather unusual for the Senate to undertake to settle a matter of blood relationship, that being expressly a judicial function. In the absence of any explanation of the matter, I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there anything in the bill about the personal representatives of the deceased?

Mr. CARTER. It specifies the names of the persons to whom the money is to be paid.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is right about it. I hope the ## CUSTOMS DISTRICT OF ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 8170) amending an act to create a customs district of the Territory of Arizona, approved April 29, 1890, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to insert after the enacting clause the following:

That the act to create a customs district of the Territory of Arizona, approved April 29, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to create a customs district of the Territory of Arizona, approved April 29, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That a new customs district, to be called the district of Arizona, be, and the same is hereby, established, which shall embrace all the Territory of Arizona. The collector of said district shall reside at Nogales, Ariz., and shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, which compensation shall be in lieu of fees, commissions, storage, and all per-quisites of every name and nature."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I have a little curiosity about the bill. What change does it make in the existing law?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that it increases the salary of the collector $1,000 per annum in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a long bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of Mr. CULBERSON. I do not insist that it shall go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance. I think there will be no objection to it on the part of the Senator from Texas or anyone else.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator objects to its going to the Calendar under Rule IX, I will not insist on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator that there are several other small measures on the Calendar that we want passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will take only a very short time, and I do not think the Senate will make any better progress than by reading the bill; it is very short.

Mr. CLAY. Will not the Senator be willing to have it printed in the Record?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I ask that it be read. It is very short. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary Mr. ALDRICH. will read the bill and the amendments of the Committee on Finance.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the section read:

That section 6 of an act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

proved March 14, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $20, and to issue gold certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $10, and the coin so deposited shall be retained in the Treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any national banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve: Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin and bullion held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $100,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended: And provided further, That whenever and so long as the aggregate amount of United States notes and silver certificates in the general fund of the Treasury shall exceed $60,000,000 the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, suspend the issue of the certificates herein provided for: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue such certificates in denominations of $50 or less: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue such certificates in denominations of $10,000, payable to order. And section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed."

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out section 2 in the following words:

Sec. 2. That section 12 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 12. That upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, by any national banking association, of any bonds of the United States in the manner provided by existing law, such association shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to the par value of the bonds so deposited; and any national banking association now having bonds on deposit for the security of circulating notes in blank to an amount which will increase the circubeen issued less than the par value of the bonds, shall be entitled, upon due application to the Comptroller of the Currency, to receive additional circulating notes in bank to an amount which will increase the circulating notes held by such association to the par value of the bonds deposited, such additional notes to be held and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued, and subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to modify or repeal the provisions of section 5167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to require additional deposits of bonds or of lawful money in case the market value of the bonds held to secure the circulating notes shall fall below the par value of the circulating notes outstanding for which such bonds may be deposited as security: And provided further, That the circulating notes furnished to national banking associations under the provisions of this act shall be of the denominations prescribed by law; and that any national banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, and place in circulation, such portion of its circulating notes, in the circulating notes for circulation of $5, as the Secretary of the Treasury any nat

And to insert the following new sections:

And to insert the following new sections:

SEC. 2. That whenever and so long as the outstanding silver certificates of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5, issued under the provisions of section 7 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, shall be, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, insufficient to meet the public demand therefor, he is hereby authorized to issue United States notes of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5, and upon the issue of United States notes of such denominations an equal amount of United States notes of higher denominations shall be retired and canceled: Provided, hovever, That the aggregate amount of United States notes at any time outstanding shall remain as at present fixed by law: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting the right of any national bank to issue one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5, as now provided by law.

SEC. 3. That section 5153 of the Revised Statues be amended to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 5153 of the neviscolous as follows:
"Sec. 5153. All national banking associations designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be depositaries of public money, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary: and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government: and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government. And every association so designated as receiver or depositary of the public money shall take and receive at par all of the national currency bills, by whatsoever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, or for loans or stocks."

SEC. 4. That section 9 of the act of July 12, 1882, as amended by the act of March 14, 1900, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association now organized, or hereafter organized, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, upon a deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided in section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, or as provided in this act, is authorized to deposit lawful money and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, withdraw a proportionate amount of the bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits: Provided, That not more than $9,000,000 of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to withdrawal of circulating notes in consequence thereof."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the national banking act, and

CLAIMS OF OMAHA INDIANS.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6190) authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims. It was reported this morning.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "for," to insert the words "determination of;" after the word "amount," in the same line, to insert the words "if any;" and in the same line, after the word "due," to strike out the words "or claimed to be due;" in line 14, before the word "claims," to insert the words "legal or equitable;" and after the word "claims," in the same line, to insert the words "if any;" so as to read:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe of the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress or the unexecuted stipulations of any treaties, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said Omaha tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay to said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal or equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States and to enter judgment thereon, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.
Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, Senators about me think this bill ought not to be considered to-night, because there are only a few Senators present. It will be remembered that the bill was called up the other day as a part of the Indian appropriation bill, and there was considerable discussion on it. As I under-stood from the Senators who raised objection at that time, they had no objection to the measure as a separate bill. Some Senators, however, think that the bill should not be considered with so few Senators present, and I therefore ask that it be now laid aside, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Nebraska, retaining its place.

RIGHT OF WAY OVER FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25124) amending section 2477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:
"Sec. 2477. The right of way for the construction of highways over public lands and lands included in forest reserves, not otherwise reserved for public uses, is hereby granted."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a general

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is. It is to amend section 2477 of the Revised Statutes relating to right of way for highways. The law was passed in 1866, before we had forest reserves, so that that law is not applicable to forest reserves. If a county wants to build a road over a forest reserve they have to come here and ask for permission, and the purpose of this bill is simply to make that law apply to forest reserves just the same as it applies to public lands. The Commissioner of the Land Office states:

At the date of the statute embraced in said revised section (July 26, 1866) there were no forest reserves, and the law as it now exists is not applicable to them. The highways provided for will be constructed under the local State laws and regulations, will be of benefit to the officers having charge of the reserves as well as to settlers and other citizens, and I see no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is it that grants this per-

Mr. JONES of Washington. The statute itself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The statute can not enforce itself. Mr. JONES of Washington. The local authority, of course, will build the road the same as they do over public lands now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What committee does this come from?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Public Lands Committee, and it has the unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman who gets the timber?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The timber is cut off and thrown to one side, I suppose, or used in the building of bridges, culverts, embankments, etc.

Mr. PAYNE. What is there to prevent the running of highways in all directions over forest reserves in order to get the timber?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The county authorities do not have money enough to run many highways over forest reserves. They are usually restricted in their means. Furthermore, there never was any disposition to do this over the public lands and there is no danger of it now. These roads are put in by public money and no officer would think of following the course suggested. The gentleman surely does not make this suggestion seriously

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has this been referred to the forestry division?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and they say that the law is sufficient; they ask that a provision be put in that it shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the forestry division The Committee on Public Lands was opposed or department. to that proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any provision in the bill that some Government official shall first give permission?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not, the purpose of the bill is to avoid anything of that kind.

Mr. PAYNE. I think, Mr. Speaker, I must object.

BRIDGES OVER CUMBERLAND RIVER NEAR NASHVILLE, TENN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8274) to amend an act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Cumberland River at or near Nashville, Tenn.," approved April 24, 1906, be so amended as to extend the time for commencing the construction of said bridges one year, and for completing the same three years, from April 24, 1907.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may

I ask what committee reported this bill?

Mr. BURNETT. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The bill was called to the attention of the gentleman on yester-It was first improperly referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and then referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and it comes in with the unanimous report from the committee and has the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, War Department.

Mr. MANN. It is in violation of every principle that has been adopted by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in recommending the passage of these dam bills. It makes no reference whatever to the general dam act, to which we require all dam acts to conform.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope the gentleman will make no objection. This bill is well guarded and is recommended by the Chief of Engineers, War Department, and was considered very carefully by the subcommittee and then by the full Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANN. I had understood it was a mere matter of a dam in connection with a lock constructed by the Government. I am not willing to say we require one thing in a committee that has proper jurisdiction and consent that another committee shall report a different kind of bill, unless at least we have examined Let us have time to look at it. Temporarily, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

BOULEVARD THROUGH THE MILITARY RESERVATION OF FORT DOUGLAS, UTAH.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8362) to authorize the city council of Salt Lake City, Utah, to construct and maintain a boulevard through the military reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby empowered to authorize the city council of Salt Lake City, Utah, to construct and maintain a boulevard through the military reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah, upon such location and of such width and upon such plans and subject to such conditions as he may deem proper for the protection of the interests of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How near is the reservation to this town?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. The reservation adjoins the city of Salt Lake.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it vest its title in the town or simply does it give an easement?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War to grant permission for the construction of this boulevard upon such plans and conditions as he may deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Howell of Utah, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25570) to amend an act approved May 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 6 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians. and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 182, 183), entitled "An act to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting the words "of the Five Civilized Tribes" between the word "Indians" and the word "in" in the last line of the third proviso; so that this proviso shall read:

"And provided further. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill is?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This bill proposes to amend a law that was passed at the last session of this Congress so that the law will read exactly as it passed the House. a bill last year with a proviso that it should not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes, and the bill went to the Senate, and the Senate amended it by changing the proviso so that it should not apply to the Indians in the Indian Territory. All that this bill does is to put the law into the shape that the bill was in when it passed the House last year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did that bill finally become a

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That bill became a law. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason it did not fix it then?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman desires me to do so, I will read briefly what the Commissioner says in regard to it. This is a bill that the Department asks for and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has written me concerning it as follows:

The explanation of the need of such an amendment is as follows: When your bill was on its passage somebody concerned in dissociating the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indian Territory from any connection with your plan for disposing of allotments through administrative action procured the insertion of an exception to this effect: "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any Indians in the Indian Territory." Everybody seems to have forgotten for the moment that there is one other agency in Indian Territory besides that which has jurisdiction of the Five Civilized Tribes. We know it as the Quapaw Agency, under which are grouped fragments of the Peoria, Ottawa, Quaqaw, Modoc, Seneca, Eastern Shawnee, Miami, and Wyandotte tribes, numbering in the aggregate about 1,600 souls. These Indians are in a different situation generally and at a different stage of development from the Five Civilized Tribes, and belong to the same group as other reservation Indians scattered throughout the country. They should have the same treatment as regards their allotments. A considerable number of them are now entirely fit to be set free; a much larger number are not. By the "provided further" which I have quoted above these people can not be reached, when they are deserving of emancipation, except by special individual legislation. The passage of this bill would limit the operation of the proviso to the Five Civilized Tribes, and thereby leave us in administrative control of the Indians under the Quapaw Agency just as we are of the Kiowas and the Sioux and all the rest.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest, I will state that this reservation is up next to Kansas and Missouri, in the northwestern portion of the Indian Territory, and it was presumed at the time this bill was in the Senate that there were no Indians in the Territory save the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is that the Miami tribe of Indians? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is one of them. There were several grouped under the Quapaw Agency, and they were cut out under the provisions of the bill, and it should be extended This is to cure a defect in the original bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7372) to authorize the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy, as a gift, of a sailboat for use of midshipmen at the Naval Academy

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept as a gift, from a member of the family of the late Assistant Naval Constructor Joseph E. McDonald, a saliboat for the use of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a conference report on the bill H. R. 21579, and ask that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21579) granting an increase of pension to Sarah R. Harrington, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as fol-

STATEMENT.

This bill originally passed the House at $25 per month, but was amended in the Senate to $50 per month. The result of the conference is that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate at $50 per month, and the conferees have agreed to a rating of $35 per month; and your conferees recommend that the bill pass at $35 per month, in accordance with said agreement.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER, WM. H. DRAPER, WILLIAM RICHARDSON, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What kind of a pension bill is this? Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is for the widow of Commander Harrington, of the Navy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You never got a $30-a-month bill for the Mexican veterans out of that committee yet?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes; we have, begging the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FINLEY. One at $45.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I mean a general bill. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No; we have not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the report was agreed to.

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 25013) entitled "An act granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, township No. 9 north, of range No. 3 west, of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.," with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JAMES H. DAVIS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9841) entitled "An act to correct the military record of James H. Davis," with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

PHOENIX WATER COMPANY, PHOENIX, ARIZ.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 25039. The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25039) to enable the city of Phoenix, in Maricopa County, Ariz., to use the proceeds of certain municipal bonds for the purchase of the plant of the Phoenix Water Company and to extend and improve said plant.

Be it enacted, etc., That the contract entered into by and between the common council of the city of Phoenix, county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, and the Phoenix Water Company, a corporation doing business in and about the said city of Phoenix, Ariz., of date January 15, 1907, for the purchase of the water plant of the said Phoenix Water Company for the sum of $90,000 in cash and the assumption of $60,000 of first-mortgage bonds be, and the same is hereby, validated, ratified, and confirmed, and the said common council of the city of Phoenix is hereby authorized to proceed under said contract to purchase the said water plant described and specified in said contract, and is hereby authorized to use the money arising from the sale of the $300,000 water-works bonds heretofore authorized by the Congress of the United States and mentioned in said contract, for the purpose of purchasing the said property and carrying out the provisions of the said contract, and for the further purpose of paying the said $60,000 assumed thereunder and of improving, extending, enlarging, repairing, and rebuilding said water system.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force and take effect from and after its passage.

Sec. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act in so far as they affect this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO COLORADO.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24134.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24134) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado, free of price, desert lands formerly in the Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 4 of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and the acts amendatory thereof, approved June 11, 1896, and March 3, 1901, respectively, be, and are hereby, extended over and shall apply to the desert lands included within the limits of the former Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado not included in any forest reservation, in addition to the provisions of existing laws relating to homestead entries and cash entries thereon, and that the State of Colorado may make application for the segregation of said desert lands under said section, and the United States thereupon shall donate, grant, and patent to the State of Colorado, free of price or cost of survey, such desert lands upon the State of Colorado complying with the provisions of said section 4, approved August 18, 1894, and the acts amendatory thereof.

SEC. 2. That all sums of money that may be lost to the Ute Indian fund by reason of the passage of this act shall be paid into the fund by the United States, to be held by the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Ute Indians.

SEC. 3. That no lands shall be included in any tract to be segregated under the provisions of this act on which the United States Government has valuable improvements or which have been reserved for Indian schools or farm purposes.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read,

Amend the title by inserting the word "Southern" before the word "Ute," in line 2 of the title.

Section 1, line 12, amend by inserting before the word "Ute" the word "Southern."

Strike out section 2.

Renumber section 3 as section 2.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, I would like some explanation of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill as printed does not contain the proviso recommended by the committee. I wish to move to amend by inserting in the print of the bill the proviso recommended by the committee in its report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by striking out all after the word "reservation," in line 13, page 1, and insert the following:

"Provided, That before a patent shall issue for any of the lands aforesaid under the terms of the said act approved August 18, 1894, and amendments thereto, the State of Colorado shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for the lands so patented, and the money so paid shall be subject to the provisions of section 3 of the act of June 15, 1880, entitled 'An act to accept and ratify the agreements submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out same."

Mr. MONDELL. I move also to amend the title by striking out the words "free of price."
Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what this bill does?

Mr. MONDELL. I call this bill up for the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks], who is necessarily absent for a moment. This bill relates to some lands in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado. Some time between 1880 and 1890 these lands were opened to settlement under various land laws, with a provision that the settler should pay $1.25 an acre. Later a bill was passed granting the settler under the home-stead laws these lands without any payment. Some two years ago the State of Colorado attempted to provide for the irriga-tion of these lands, which had not been settled, under what is known as the "Carey Act," and made application for segrega-tion under that act, but the Land Office held that the lands were not subject to segregation under the Carey Act.

This bill proposes to make this land subject to segregation under the Carey Act, and provides that the State of Colorado shall pay the regular desert-land price for the same. The genshall pay the regular desert-land price for the same. tleman understands that the Carey Act is a law under which the State obligates itself for the irrigation, reclamation, and settlement of desert land, and the patents ultimately go to those who irrigate, reclaim, and settle. The bill meets the objections of the Department in its present form. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs objected to it in its original form, because that did not provide for payment to the Indians. Now, as a matter of fact, the Government would not receive any money for these lands if they were settled under the homestead law, but would be obligated to pay the Indians $1.25 per acre. The committee was of the opinion that if the land was to be made subject to the Carey Act it would be wise to provide for payment as suggested by the Commissioner, and hence we provide for that in the amendment which has been read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to inquire if this land was paid for by the United States when it took it from the Indians?

Mr. MONDELL. The original provision of the law was that the settler should pay, and as to those lands that were taken under the homestead law, it was later provided the settler should have his land free, and the Government was to pay the Indians $1.25 an acre. That is the present condition of these lands. If they are settled under the homestead law the Government would be obligated to the Indians to pay $1.25 and the settler would pay nothing. Under the proposed law these lands, for such portion as are to be turned over to the State, for such portion as can be irrigated under the Carey Act, the State is to pay the Government, for the benefit of the Indians, the sum of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was this bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. MONDELL. It was reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is not the Hogg bill, to buy lands from the Indians?

Mr. MONDELL. These are public lands, and the purpose is to authorize the sale of them. There is an obligation on the part of the Government when the lands are disposed of to pay the Indians. Now, the object of the legislation is to provide that the State of Colorado shall take upon itself the obligation to pay for such lands as are irrigated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are the payments to be made to the treasury of Colorado or to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. The State of Colorado is to pay into the Treasury of the United States and make its own arrangement with the settlers

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What authority have we to compel the State to make an agreement?

Mr. MONDELL. We compel nothing; we permit. The State of Colorado pays under the Carey Act if they accept these

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the gentleman must know that the State must be obligated by the legislature of the State. Mr. MONDELL. The State does not receive these lands until these matters have been provided for by the State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This, then, is only a proposition on the part of Congress to the State of Colorado, as I understand?

Mr. MONDELL. Only a proposition on the part of Congress to the State.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.
Mr. WALDO. I should like to know whether any provision is made here for the reservation of coal and mineral lands to the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. There is no reservation, more than there has been in any law that has been passed by the American Con-These lands are examined by a special inspector of the Interior Department before they are turned over to the State. A personal examination of the ground is made, and the lands must of course be nonmineral lands or they can not be turned over to the State under the law.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I should like also to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the fact that the original act, to which this relates, is limited by its terms to nonmineral, nonforested, agricultural desert lands, which are subject to a dual examination, one by the Government and one by the State.

Mr. WALDO. In case it should subsequently develop that these are mineral lands, will the lands then belong to the State or its patentees, or do they return to the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it has been the rule of this Government from its foundation down to the present time, and there has been no exception to it at any time, that after lands obtained in good faith are patented they are the property of the patentee, together with all that the lands contain. There has never been any exception to that; but these lands are examined and they must be nonmineral, nontimbered, and desert in character, so far is it is possible for an examination to develop those facts, or they can not go under the grant.

Mr. WALDO. How many acres are there?

Mr. MONDELL. Probably about 15,000 would be affected by this law

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. Mondell was agreed to.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and

On motion of Mr. Mondell the title was amended as previously indicated.

On motion of Mr. Mondell, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOLDERS OF MEDALS OF HONOR.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been read heretofore in the House. The Clerk will read the title.
The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 223, relating to the holders of medals of honor, Mr. GILBERT, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the resolution again reported.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the holders of medals of honor under the act approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1863, shall not be required to surrender such medals in case such medals are replaced, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904; and that wherever the holders of such medals of honor have surrendered them, in order to receive the medals provided for by said act approved April 23, 1904, such medals shall be returned to them: Provided, That no recipient of both medals shall wear both medals at the same time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engressed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Foster of Vermont, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25483, the post-office appropriation bill, with Mr. Currier in the chair.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bennet].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, last year I had the honor to submit, on the 13th day of April, when the post-office appropriation bill was before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, some remarks, of which the following was a part:

I am not one of those who cavil unreservedly at the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I have come to appreciate that they have many difficulties with which to contend, and while I can not think that they have done and are doing justice to the carriers and clerks in large cities, I am at least in the frame of mind which was enjoined on the congregation in a western church by the sign over the organ, "Please don't shoot the organist; he is doing his level best."

Mr. Chairman, my views as to the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee have not changed since that time. sume that these remarks were the first commendation that had been uttered by a New York City Member relative to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the last twenty-five years. I should not blame the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] and his associates very much if they with-held consideration from a great deal that we ask for for New York City, for our newspapers give them very little credit for the good that they do.

Last year they authorized a great extension of our pneumatictube service in New York City, and they authorized a ten-year contract which we had been contending for for years. All the reward they ever have gotten from New York City, outside of reward they ever have gotten from New York City, outside of the speech of mine, which I sent through my district, was an article in a magazine published in our city in January, six months after they had authorized the pneumatic-tube service, denouncing the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] by name, and other Members collectively, as "hayseeds" for not giving them that pneumatic-tube service which they had actually given our city six months before.

I think that the committee has given attention to the affairs of large cities. I do not think that they have done full justice to the clerks and carriers this year, but I think that is possibly because they have had their minds engrossed with railway mail pay and second-class matter proceedings. While I feel so friendly toward the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, it is an additional grief to me that in the carrier matter they have, in the language of the streets, "handed us a lemon," and I say it more in sorrow than in anger.

I desire to have the Clerk read in my time a communication which I received showing how erroneous is the idea that this bill increases carriers' salaries. In the city of New York to-day when they advertise an examination for clerks the Republican county committee sends me, as an executive member from the nineteenth assembly district, a notice to send down all men I can, and that every man who passes with 70 per cent will be appointed. I say in sadness that the men on the average who are now being appointed clerks in the New York City post-office are not as high grade men as those appointed five years ago. Of course there are very many good men who go in, many splendid men, but the average is not so good.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?
Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.
Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman says that he receives notice from the Republican committee. I would like to ask if any Democrat receives anything of that sort?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; Democrats as well as Republicans.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman kindly indicate who of the Democrats has ever been notified of that fact?

Mr. BENNET of New York. They are notified the same as we are. There is a paper called "The Chief," which publishes all these matters. Our county committee being up to date, under the lead of the gentleman from New York here, Mr. Parsons, subscribes for the paper, reads it, and when he finds a notice of examination sends that notice around to the district leaders. It is public information, open to all. And I want to say to my colleague from New York that Tammany Hall is just as smart and just as vigilant in New York City as the Republicans—according to election results, smarter.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understood my colleague to say that

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I diderstood my colleague to say that he received a notification, not that he saw an advertisement.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, I received a notification from the secretary of the Republican county committee, and I posted it upon the bulletin board of my club, and if I get any more I shall post them up in the same way.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to thank the gentleman for giving the Democratic organization in New York City, Tammany Hall, the credit of being as smart as the New York Republicans of that city. I believe that its leaders are thoroughly alert and do not let any opportunity slip to benefit its members and improve the service.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But we don't get the Federal offices.
Mr. GOULDEN. I am fully convinced that the Democrats have full and equal opportunity in the examinations, but I am have full and equal opportunity in the examinations, but I am not so sure that this applies to appointments.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, the danger is that unless we do something for the carriers, the carrier service will decrease in efficiency. I concede that the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee ought not to consider first the individual welfare of the carrier, but the welfare of the service.

And now we have got the clerks' service in such a condition we can not get men to fill the vacancies, and if this misleading so-called "carriers' increase" goes through, under which a man going into the service now will have to wait certainly nine and possibly thirteen years before he will get as much money under the new schedule as he is getting now, we will have the carriers' service in the large cities so you can not get men to deliver your mail. I know the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads did not intend that, and I think if they had had more time to consider it the committee would have seen where the trouble came in.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will excuse me. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has not done any such thing. It will not take ten or fifteen years

Mr. BENNET of New York. When my friend hears this read I will be very glad if he gets time from his side to refute it. I will now ask the Clerk to read this.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper will be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senators and Congressmen of the United States:

DEAR SIRS: Will this be an increase in salary?
We most respectfully beg to call your attention to the following table of letter carriers' salaries in cities with a population of over 75,000: Salary under present law :

First yearSecond year	$600
Third year	1,000
Fourth year	1,000
Fifth year	1,000

Result after nine years' services as a regular carrier, loss $90. Adding to this from two to four years' services as a substitute carrier, it would require from eleven to thirteen years' services to be even with the present salary law (not figuring any interest lost), should the bill as recommended by the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee become a law.

During the reading,
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing the remainder of that article.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY].

Mr. Chairman, for some time past I have been Mr. SPERRY. receiving letters from the business men of my district, from business men's associations, and from other commercial organizations, all urging strongly the necessity of increasing the salaries of our postal employees. These petitions and letters call attention to the fact that many railway mail clerks, post-office clerks, city and rural carriers are resigning because of insufficient remuneration, and the files of the Post-Office Department will bear this out. There are few, and, in some places, no eligibles on the civil-service list for these places, a condition of affairs that necessarily tends to cripple the entire service. The First Assistant Postmaster-General, when before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, admitted that resignations were taking place. A large majority of these men leave the service because they are offered better inducements somewhere else and better remuneration.

The loss of good clerks or experienced carriers is a great loss to the people they serve, for postal work is of such a nature that it requires considerable time for a new man to learn the business sufficiently to serve the patrons of the office as they have a right to expect. Our entire post-office organization is the outgrowth of a very small beginning. It has taken years to build up, and we have placed it on a high plane. Its reputation is good and its personnel efficient. We should strive to maintain the excellent reputation it has taken years to estab-Without good men to do the work, we can not hope to maintain the record of the service for the past few years. loss of a long-tried and faithful clerk is a great loss to the business community.

Let me quote to you from the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the current year:

Much of the work in our post-offices is of such a nature that it requires months of practice before proficiency can be attained, and the necessity of employing untrained men to replace those resigning a Lost in interest, at 5 per cent, $90.

is a serious handicap. Recognizing these conditions, the Department has greatly increased its estimates for salaries, and it is believed that the granting of the larger appropriations recommended will be a measure of true economy. A failure at this time to increase materially the compensation of post-office employees, thus keeping pace with the advancing wages in other lines of employment, will seriously jeopardize the efficiency of the service.

Post-offices were not established for the purpose of filling our vaults with money, but to assist our business men to carry on their business successfully and to promote social correspondence. Post-offices had their small beginnings and a natural growth. In the early times we had to go to the post-office to transact our postal business. We paid in cash at the office the postage required. From such a crude beginning the service has grown to its enormous proportions of to-day. We have railway mail clerks distributing mail day and night on our fast express trains. The clerks in our post-offices work day and night, while our carriers collect and deliver mail free of charge. For all this service we simply are required to pay the necessary postage.

The Post-Office Department employs to-day over 200,000 persons, and it is estimated that there are 65,600 post-offices throughout the whole country. The importance to the country of this vast service can be seen at a glance. It is, in fact, the branch of the service of our Government which comes closest to the people, and for that reason we should strive all the more to improve it.

It is stated by the subcommittee, who had this bill in charge originally, that every employee of the postal service gets an increase under the bill. I hardly think this is so, for I find in some of the higher grades, such as for assistant superintendents and chief clerks, there is no increase in the number of clerks provided for in this bill as compared with the one for the current year. I do not see why all should not be increased. The same conditions of higher living confront them all, and they should all be treated alike. For this reason I voted in committee for a general increase all along the line of 20 per cent, but I was one of a very small minority, and I fear that it is useless at this session to try further on this line.

The bill now before us, however, is a step in the right direction. Justice is certainly done to some and many will be benefited by the provisions of this bill. It is at least an opening wedge, and we show the people we are not unmindful of the needs of the service so dear and close to them. For these reasons I urge you all to vote for the bill as reported by the committee and leave to future Congresses to meet whatever conditions may arise in the years to come. [Loud applause.]
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, under general debate on H. R. 25483, being "A bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," I desire in the limited time given me, to offer some suggestions on the bill in general and some special remarks relative to rural free-delivery service.

This bill carries an appropriation of $209,416,802 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. This is an increase of $2,754,612 over the original estimates made by the Department. This fact alone shows the great interest the committee had in this service and their earnest desire to liberally provide for same and better it in every way possible during the coming fiscal year.

It further shows that the committee have carefully gone into an investigation of this service and are willing to provide, as far as possible, for its betterment and support.

I served for several terms as a member of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads and know something of the arduous work they have to perform. Speaking generally, I believe the bill now under consideration is a fair one.

When I first became a member of that committee, the annual appropriation bill amounted to about $60,000,000. I have seen it grow to the enormous sum of $209,416,802, as provided for in this bill. The needs of the country have demanded this increase.

It is one of the duties of a government to furnish to its people every convenience of mail service and otherwise to which they are entitled, and I am pleased to note that under the wise and liberal provisions of Congress this Government is furnishing our people the best mail facilities provided for by any civilized government in the world.

I regret that the committee did not provide a larger amount for rent, light, and fuel as well as an increase for clerk hire in second, third, and fourth class post-offices, and that no sufficient provision is made for increase of salaries to all the railway mail clerks, and I trust that by amendments to this bill same may be provided for. I shall be more than glad to aid in securing increased appropriations along this line.

During my terms of service on the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads the question of establishing rural free-delivery service was frequently brought up and discussed generally.

Myself and certain other members of the committee always favored same. However, a majority of the committee were against us for several sessions of Congress. Finally, for the fiscal year 1897, we secured an appropriation of $40,000 to inaugurate an experimental rural delivery. I well remember that those of us who favored this were laughed at by many of our colleagues in the House. We were told that our ideas on this subject were visionary and could never be carried into effect. However, during the fiscal year 1897 this appropriation was expended, and the experiment worked so well that the Post-Office Department, in 1898, asked us to increase the appropriation to $50,250 for the next fiscal year. This we did.

In 1899 the appropriation was increased to $150,032. In 1900 the appropriation was increased to $450,000. In 1901 the appropriation was increased to $1,750,796. In 1902 the appropriation was increased to $4,089,075. 1903 the appropriation was increased to $8,580,364. In 1904 the appropriation was increased to $12,926,905. 1905 the appropriation was increased to $21,116,600.

In 1906 the appropriation was increased to $25,828,300.

In the bill now under consideration the amount recommended for this service is $28,200,000.

Such has been the wonderful growth in this country of rural free delivery since its inception ten years ago, and having trav-eled in some other countries where rural delivery is in vogue, am glad to say that, from my observations, our service in the United States is not surpassed by any other country.

This service will be continued and soon rural free delivery will be fully provided for the entire United States. It is a godsend to our people in the country. It gives them to understand that this great Government of ours carefully looks after the individual interests and personal conveniences of its citizens. Through this service the Government delivers at the doors of its rural citizens their mall as promptly and conveniently as it delivers same to the residents of cities. In my judgment, rural service is one of the greatest means for the dissemination of knowledge and information to our people in the country they have ever enjoyed. By this means they are enabled to keep in touch with the markets of the country and with current events in all parts of the world. It is a great boon to all our people, and I am glad I have lived to see it ripen into a permanent service, which will continue to improve and eventually carry to the doors of the humblest citizen its beneficent benefits.

On pages 3 to 10 of the report of the Fourth Assistant Poston pages 3 to 10 of the report of the Fourth Assistant Post-master-General for the year ending June 30, 1906, will be found a detailed statement of "Growth of the service," "County rural service," "Inspection of existing service," "Conditions necessary to establishment," "Rural mail boxes," "Roads,"

"Transportation of mail," and "Rural letter carriers."

These statements I regard as being of especial interest to my people, and I have taken the liberty of inserting them here as a part of my remarks:

GROWTH OF THE SERVICE.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, the tenth year in which rural delivery has been in operation, there has been material decrease in the demand for the service. The climax in the development of the rural delivery of mail was reached in the fiscal year 1904, when the service was installed on 9,447 routes. At that time the average number of petitions filed per month was 700. This average was maintained during the fiscal year 1905, but during the past fiscal year the number of petitions filed was 4,687, a monthy average of 390. Of this number, 3,720 were accepted for investigation.

With the close of the fiscal year 1906, rural delivery was in operation on 35,766 routes. On 233 of these routes service is performed triweekly. On nearly all of the remainder the service is daily, as it is contrary to the policy of the Department to establish rural delivery with service more frequent than once a day. During the year 3,732 new routes were established and 76 routes were discontinued, the net increase for the year in the number of routes in operation being 3,656. The decrease in the number of routes established is due to the falling off in the demand for the service. The number of petitions pending June 30, 1906, ws 3,099. Since that date 449 petitions have been accepted and 752 routes established or ordered established. There are on hand awaiting action 825 petitions favorably reported, making the net number of petitions pending October 1, 1906, 1,908.

COUNTY RURAL SERVICE.

On June 30, 1906, complete rural delivery was in operation in 448 counties, in 165 of which it had been completed during the year. Since that date and up to September 30, orders have been issued for completing the service in 98 additional counties.

The following table shows, by States, the disposition of petitions for rural service in the aggregate up to June 30, 1906, and during the fiscal year ended on that date:

Carrying out the purpose expressed in the last annual report of this office, a system of inspection of the rural-delivery service has been instituted with a view to bringing it up to a reasonable standard of efficiency, eliminating unnecessary duplication of service on roads traversed by star-route service and ascertaining the causes of lack of patronage where found and, if possible, applying a remedy. In this inspection the policy outlined in the report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905, has been followed, to wit:

In all cases where the patronage of post-offices is believed to be adequately served by rural delivery, recommendations for their discontinuance have been submitted to the First Assistant Postmaster-General; where the patronage of a route is not deemed sufficient to warrant daily delivery triweekly service is substituted, reducing the cost of the service, and where triweekly service is not justified the route is discontinued In carrying out this policy every effort is made to continue the service to the patrons who have used it. Out of 35,766 routes in operation June 30, 1906, triweekly service was being rendered on 233, only 45 of which had been reduced from daily delivery because of lack of patronage, the remainder having been inaugurated with triweekly service in sections where the population did not require daily deliveries.

In many instances the reductions of routes from daily to triweekly service has resulted in stimulating increased patronage and consequent restoration of daily service. Since June 30 and up to Septemter 30, 1906, service has been rendered triweekly on 88 routes because of lack of patronage, and 42 routes have been established with such service.

CONDITIONS NECESSARY TO ESTABLISHMENT.

The requirements for the establishment of rural delivery have been the same as for the two preceding fiscal years except that since December 1, 1905, it is required, before service is installed, that the postmaster at the distributing office certify that not less than three-fourths of the possible patrons have provided for mail boxes conforming to the regulations. The initial step in securing the inauguration of rural delivery service is the filing of a petition for such service.

Inquiry is now made through postmasters as to whether petitioners te heads of families or householders actually residing along the proposed route of delivery, and if so, it is presumed they have petitioned in good faith for the service.

After a petition is accepted an inspector visits the locality and if the conditions are favorable lays out the route to be traveled in the delivery of mail. Favorable conditions are: The roads to be traversed to be in good condition, unobstructed by gates; no unbridged creeks or streams not fordable at all seasons of the year, and a possible patronage of 100 or more families on each route of 24 or more miles in length, or a proportionate number of families where it is necessary to lay out routes less than the standard length.

RURAL MAIL BOXES.

Persons desiring the benefits of service on a rural delivery route are required to furnish and erect in a suitable place accessible to the carrier, at their own cost, boxes for the reception of mail to be delivered or collected by the carrier.

All rural letter boxes must conform to the specifications fixed by the Department as to size, shape, and workmanship; must be made of galvanized iron or sheet steel, equipped with some kind of a signal for indicating the presence of mail therein, and must be approved by the Department.

vanized iron or sheet steel, equipped with some kind of a sproved by the indicating the presence of mail therein, and must be approved by the Department.

Patrons may make their boxes or have them made to order by submitting a plan of such boxes and a sample of the material of which they are to be made or the boxes themselves for approval to the postmaster at any first or second class post-office located in the county where rural delivery is in operation, and in case rural delivery is not in operation at the county seat and there are no first or second class post-offices in the county, to the postmaster at any post-office in the county where rural delivery is in operation.

ROADS.

While the requirement of the Department that all roads over which rural delivery is established and maintained shall be in good condition and kept in repair has resulted in greatly improved roads and the expenditure in the aggregate by local authorities of many thousands of dollars, still there is in many localities such a lack of interest in keeping the roads in a passable condition during all ordinary seasons that the rural delivery is continued regularly with difficulty, and frequently a temporary suspension of the service has been necessary. When there is no disposition to meet the requirements of the Department in this regard, it is necessary to rearrange the route and withdraw the service from the impassable roads.

Since January 1, 1906, increased efforts have been made by road officials in various States to secure the cooperation of the Post-Office Department in the improvement of public highways on which rural delivery service has been established. The Department is now actively aiding the road officials in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Minnesota, Iowa, New Jersey, and Maine to attain this object. The method of procedure is for the road officials to send out to each rural carrier a blank containing questions to be answered by him in regard to the condition of the roads; the materials of which they are composed; how often worked and in what manner; the condition of the bridges and culverts, and whether suitable road-building material is available in the neighborhood. Postmasters at rural delivery offices are directed to cooperate with State and local road officials and to instruct the rural carriers attached to their offices to furnish all the information called for. As a result of these efforts, complaints in regard to the bad condition of roads in the States named are becoming much less frequent.

There continues to be urgent need of more active interest in road building and improvement in the prairie sections of the country, in States where low, flat lands and swamps are found, and in the mountainous regions embraced within the Appalachian chain.

TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL.

In the establishment of rural service, where it is necessary to cover roads traversed by carriers on star routes or mail-messenger routes, and where the post-offices supplied thereby can not be discontinued, it is frequently possible to curtail or discontinue such service and have the mail for the post-offices involved transported by rural carriers without additional expense. The number of post-offices receiving mail supply in this way on September 30, 1906, was 4,894.

RURAL LETTER CARRIERS.

The resignations of 4,441 carriers were accepted during the year, about 12 per cent of the carriers in the service June 30, 1906, and an increase of 1,559 over the number accepted during the preceding fiscal year. This is the greatest number of carriers resigning in any one year in the history of the service, being 125 more than in 1904, when 17 per cent of the carriers resigned.

Under the law the maximum compensation which may be paid a rural carrier is $720 per annum. They are required to furnish and maintain their own conveyances, which must provide proper protection for the mail, be a credit to the service, and be kept in a good state of repair.

In performing their duties rural carriers are exposed to all conditions of weather at all seasons of the year, which in some portions of the country calls for great physical endurance. Of the 35,666 carriers employed June 30, 1906, 13,365 are serving routes 25 to 30 miles in length, and 7,540 routes of 24 miles in length—1. e., not quite three-fifths and considerably more than one-half of the carriers travel from 24 to 30 miles six days each week. To do this requires the maintenance of at least two horses, and on a large number of routes three horses are necessary to render regular service during continued inclement weather.

Of the remaining carriers, 7,536 are performing service on routes from 20 to 24 miles in length, which, as a rule, require two horses. The Department insists, in the interest of regular, satisfactory service, on strict compliance with the schedule of departure and arrival fixed for the carriers' trips—based on an average rate of travel of 4 miles per hour.

The cost of horses and their maintenance varies greatly throughout for the carriers' trips—based on an average rate of travel of 4 miles per hour.

The cost of horses and their maintenance varies greatly throughout the country, but a moderate estimate of the original average cost of horses and vehicles is $275, and the estimated average cost of maintaining an outfit is about $250 per annum. With the daily wear and tear to which a carrier's equipment is subjected, the life of the horses and vehicle ranges from three to five years. Based on these estimates the average annual cost of the carrier's outfit is not less than $300 to $340, if kept in such condition as to be a credit to the postal service, leaving from $380 to $420 for his own labor.

In this connection a comparison of the conditions under which carriers in the city-delivery service are employed is only just to the rural carrier. Granting that city carriers are employed for the most part where the expense of living is greater, the most of them are not required to maintain any equipment, and those who are mounted are given an allowance about equal, as a rule, to the cost of maintenance. Then, too, the city carriers are not subject to the same exposure to storms and cold as are rural carriers. The compensation of city carriers ranges from $600 the first year to $850 the second year in cities of less than 75,000 population and from $600 to $1,000 the third year in cities with a population of over 75,000. Out of 22,965 city carriers in the service last year only 615 resigned. While this is a marked increase over the number resigning the previous fiscal year, it is only about 2½ per cent of the total number of carriers employed in that service.

Inasmuch as rural carriers are required to furnish and maintain their horses and vehicles, and in view of the rigorous conditions under which they must perform their duties and of the increased cost of living, the present compensation is deemed generally inadequate.

An increase in salary is proposed rather than an allowance for the maintenance of equipment for the reason that as rural delivery is now in operation in every State and the Territories of Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory, the cost of keeping horses varies greatly, and the making of fair and equitable allowances therefor would be most difficult. It would involve securing information as to the cost of horse feed in various localities in different States, the determination of the question whether service on a given route should be performed with two or three horses, and constant appeals for increased allowance based on these varying conditions.

From the above quotations it would seem to me that the present maximum rate of pay to our rural carriers, $720 per annum, is absolutely inadequate. I have always advocated giving a reasonable living wage to every employee in the Government service.

I note that in this bill the recommendation is that carriers' salaries shall be increased from $720 to $840. I do not consider this increase commensurate with the expenses which they have to incur nor the duties they have to perform.

At the proper time, during the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole, I shall offer, if I can secure recognition from the Chairman, the following amendment:

On page 30, line 17, strike out the words "eight hundred and forty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand;" so that the paragraph shall read:

paragraph shall read:
"That on and after July 1, 1907, letter carriers of the rural freedelivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,000 per annum. I believe this increase is absolutely just and right and that it should be adopted.

The rural carriers throughout our country are selected from the best of our young men. They are required to possess a good education. They must perform their duties to the satisfaction of the Post-Office Department. They are courteous and gentlemanly to all their patrons. They are respected citizens of the United States and are entitled to receive from the Government which they serve a reasonable wage for a reasonable day's For this principle I have strenuously contended since the inauguration of this service, and to secure same I shall continue my efforts along this line till our labors shall have reached their fruition and the rural letter carriers of our country shall receive the meed of justice from our Government to which they are fully, absolutely, and justly entitled. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, while the increases proposed for the postal clerks and letter carriers in this bill are by no means adequate, yet it is gratifying to find that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have taken a step in the right direction. My views in regard to the salaries of these deserving postal employees are so well known and have so frequently been stated on this floor that they need not be repeated now. It is a quarter of a century since the salaries of the carriers were fixed by law. Since then their work has greatly increased, their labor heavily multiplied, the cost of living in cities has immensely advanced, but the salaries of these men, who have rendered faithful and efficient service, have remained the same. That this is an act of gross injustice on the part of the Government toward these men no fair-minded citizen can deny.

For years efforts have been earnestly made to secure an increase of the salaries. Ever since I came to Congress I advocated it. I recall how my colleagues, Messrs. Sulzer, Fitz-GERALD, and GOULDEN, on the floor of this House spoke in support of the amendment I offered to increase the salaries. is pleasing to find that at last the proposition to increase has found favor with the committee, though I do regret that they did not go a little further while they were at it and make the maximum $1,200, as it at least ought to be.

I wish the committee had treated the junior carriers a little better than they are treated in the pending bill. In some instances they are to receive something less than they are now receiving, and I want to say this is hardly fair. ere we pass the measure-when we come to perfect the billthat this inequality may be corrected.

It is pleasing to note that there is to be an allowable exchange between postal clerks and carriers, so that the carrier, where his health requires indoor work, may take a clerk's place and the clerk who may require outdoor exercise may be taken from his confined position. Such a provision will serve a salutary purpose and I trust it will receive the unanimous support of this House.

Every consideration of fairness and fair play requires a raise of the pay of the postal men, who constitute one of the hardestworked classes of Government employees. They serve the people well. They have been, of all Government employees, the most underpaid. In the large cities of the land, especially in New York, which in part I have the honor to represent, their pay, in the light of both increased labor and cost of living, is in fact beggarly. The men-clerks and carriers alike-are worthy of an increase much beyond that now proposed in the bill, and as an act of common justice to the men who have served the public so well the well-earned increases ought to be made. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have received a large number of telegrams from citizens in the State of Arkansas asking me to oppose any reduction in the railway mail pay. Actuated purely by a desire to vote intelligently on the matter, I have made some extended investigation of the subject since receiving those telegrams. I find that there is no Member of this House who does not advocate some reduction in the railway mail pay. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reporting the bill to this House, recommended very material The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reduction, and some of those recommendations are supported by the report of the postal railway commission.

I regret my inability to comply with the request contained in these telegrams. If the authors of them had opportunity to investigate the subject it is more than probable that they would reach the conclusion that existing conditions justify, if they do not make necessary, a readjustment of the compensation paid to railroads for transporting the mail.

The statute authorizing this pay I insert in part. It is as follows:

SEC. 3997. The Postmaster-General shall arrange the railway routes on which the mail is carried, including those in which the service is partly by railway and partly by steamboat, into three classes, according to the size of the mail, the speed at which they are carried, and the frequency and importance of the service, so that each railroad shall receive, as far as practicable, a proportionate and just rate of compensation, according to the service performed.

Sec. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mail on railroad routes upon the condition and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mail shall be conveyed with due frequency and with speed; and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture in a car or apariment, properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mail.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rate, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $25; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of consecutive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the l'ostmaster-General may direct.

WHY A READJUSTMENT SHOULD BE MADE.

WHY A READJUSTMENT SHOULD BE MADE.

The first reason that suggests itself to my mind as indicating the necessity for a change is found in the antiquity of the law. The statute was passed in 1873. It was slightly modified in 1876 and again in 1878, and the appropriation act of March 3, 1905, provided for a longer period of weighing, as follows

That hereafter before making a readjustment of pay for transportation of mails on railroad routes the average weight shall be ascertained by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than ninety, at such times after June 30, 1905, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

Thus it appears that for almost thirty-five years this statute has remained without material change. During this period amazing development has occurred throughout the country, and the facilities for transportation have been greatly increased and improved. It seems to me that a second reason demanding a readjustment is found in the fact that a rate fairly compensatory thirty-five years ago is more than likely to be extortionate now. It is incredible that through all this development and improvement this subject should present the anomaly of requiring no change in its treatment by Congress. Freight rates, passenger rates, and express charges have in the meantime been greatly reduced and are still being reduced. While there are some features of this subject peculiarly calling for consideration, the vital question is whether the present system of paying the railroads is fair and should be maintained or whether inequalities and absurdities exist in the system that make necessary its revision.

FEATURES OF THIS BILL RELATING TO RAILROAD MAIL PAY.

The principal features of the bill under consideration, of which representatives of the railroads complain, are the following:

1. Reducing compensation 5 per cent on routes carrying over 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds daily.
2. Reducing compensation 10 per cent on routes carrying over 48,000 pounds and less than 80,000 pounds daily.
3. Reducing rates on routes carrying over 80,000 pounds daily to $19 for every additional 2,000 pounds.
4. Changing the method of reaching the daily average.
5. Eliminating from the weights empty mail sacks.
6. Reducing pay for furnishing, equipping, and hauling railway post-office cars.

The committee having in charge the measure have reported to the House recommending these alterations in the law. It has been charged by gentlemen here that these recommendations are made without due consideration; that they do not reflect the individual opinion of the Members composing that committee; that those individuals do not justify in their own judgments the action which they propose in this regard. I would like to know, then, whose opinion these recommendations do represent.

How did they get before this body?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley] a few days ago, in discussing this subject, said, in effect, that the time has come when it is impracticable for the railroads to receive fair treatment by this body. To use his exact language, he says:

I submit to the gentlemen of this body that in this era, when corporations have not too many friends who dare defend them even when right, when the railroads have few defenders who will stand on the floor of this House and plead for equal and exact justice, none the less, in my judgment, if the cause can be fairly and fully presented, the greatest corporation can come before this body and receive the same measure of justice, or, at least, should receive the same measure, neither more nor less, than is accorded to the poorest and humblest private citizen of our Republic. Let the square deal fall where it will.

Mr. Chairman, I have not found, in my brief career as a Member of this body, any disposition on the part of the Members of this House to oppress the railroads. On the contrary, if I may be permitted to differ with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have found that they have very many able defenders here, among whom may be fairly counted the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself.

I am impelled by no sense of opposition to railroads, but by a sense of duty alone, to say that while I regard railroads as institutions of great value in our commercial and industrial development, demanding and being entitled to receive fair treatment at the hands of all legislative bodies, yet we also owe the duty to the public to see that while no injustice is done the railroad in the manner and in the amount by which they are compensated for services rendered the Government, the people are not unjustly charged for the services they receive at the hands of these corporations. The subject should at least have fair, open, and full consideration by this body. There is a general impression throughout the country that the railroads are overpaid. The conviction is growing on the minds of the people that the entire method of compensation should be revised. The Arkansas Gazette, a leading daily paper in the State of Arkansas, contained in a recent edition the following editorial:

RAILROAD COMPENSATION FOR CARRYING THE MAILS.

Apparently some railroads are going to fight the proposed readjustment of the rates paid them by the Government for carrying the mails by threatening to cut off fast mail services or to take other such steps. Right at home we hear reports that the Iron Mountain may discontinue the fast mail train that now runs from St. Louis to Texas through Little Rock.

After long and careful investigation a Congressional committee has the fast mail train that now runs from St. Louis to Texas through Little Rock.

After long and careful investigation a Congressional committee has decided that the present arrangement under which the compensation of the roads for carrying the mails is fixed is unjust to the Government and has recommended a readjustment that will reduce the amount the Government has to pay. Now that this matter is pending, the roads are believed to be emitting hints and threats that the public will suffer if this compensation is reduced.

We believe Congress will go ahead and make the proposed readjustment. The roads are now paid under an arrangement that was made in 1874. Conditions have changed since then. The Government should not pay the roads too much even if the Government had money to throw away, but the money is urgently needed for other departments of the postal service. The country districts are continually calling for extension of the rural free-delivery service, and sooner or later the Government will have to pay higher wages to its post-office clerks and other employees or see the service deteriorate.

And another thing the Government should do is to make the railroads run their mail trains with some regard to their schedules.

The present method of fixing compensation contains some absurd features, to which I desire, briefly, to call attention. First, with reference to the method of ascertaining the average daily weight of mail carried, to which attention has been called by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock], it has been con-clusively established during the course of this debate that the mails are weighed for a given period, including Sundays, and the average daily weight carried is found by dividing the total weight carried for all the days by the number of days less Sundays. The statute requires that the weighing shall be done on "working days." Working days, according to the best authorities, means days on which work may be legally done. This would exclude not only Sundays, but legal holidays as well. The mistake, which has become so well established as now to be regarded as law, in the method of ascertaining the daily average is due to the fact that "working days" seems to be given two similarities that "working days" seems to be given two similarities that "working days" seems to be given two significations in its application to railway mail carriage. In the weighing of the mails it is made to mean every day on which the mails are in fact carried, including Sundays and legal holidays; but in the ascertaining of the daily average it is interpreted as meaning the days on which work may be legally done, which excludes holidays as well as Sundays. Now the law does not authorize the weighing of mails except on working days, and if working days means only six days in the week, as it has been construed, then the weight should be ascertained for the six days and the average weight determined by dividing

It is clear to my mind that the correct way to ascertain the "average daily weight" is to ascertain the whole weight for a given number of days and divide that sum by that number of days. It is contended by the Department and by many gentlemen here that the statute fixes what is, in effect, an arbitrary method of ascertaining the average daily weight of mails carried, and that the method, however incongruous it may appear, must be followed in the application of the law. I do not here controvert the proposition that the legislative department has the power to fix the method of ascertaining the daily weight of mails carried and that by means of the manner in which they fix it the average ascertained may be in fact very different from the true average daily weight. But I do contend that Congress has not done that, and if the law under which mails have been transported for thirty-five years is susceptible of the construc-tion that the average daily weight is to be ascertained by adding together the mails carried on seven days and dividing the sum by 6 instead of 7, then, for the sake of simplicity and fairness, the law ought to be changed and the system placed upon a rational basis that will not present to the public eye the appearance of favoritism to the railroads in the administration of the law.

Some gentlemen who oppose this change in the law, it appears to me, are somewhat inconsistent. In one breath they say that it makes no difference whether in ascertaining the daily average the actual average be ascertained, or what may be termed the constructive average, and yet they oppose the removal from our statutes of this anomalous or ambiguous provision which makes possible confusion and has justified criticism. As a matter of fact, this change alone will result in saving several millions of dollars annually to this country. I think the time has come when the change ought to be made. It is not apparent that any injustice will be done by reason of such a change, but, on the contrary, since freight rates, express charges, and passenger fares have fallen and are constantly decreasing, some reduction can certainly be made in the expense of transporting our mails, which has come to be so considerable an item as to carry in this bill $44,660,000. This is more than one-half dollar to every man, woman, and child in the United States. I am proud of the fact that this service rendered by the railroads has been in many instances highly satisfactory and in most instances efficient. In some localities, however, the service is and has been open to severe criticism. The railroads, to save expense, in some parts of the country have permitted great delays in the transportation of the mails. Quick service and prompt service has come to be regarded as essential, and in this regard the service heretofore rendered by the railroads is certainly not altogether above criticism.

PAYMENT FOR EMPTY MAIL BAGS.

Another feature of this proposed legislation relates to the payment for the transportation of empty mail bags. A careful examination of the statutes relating to the subject reveals the fact that no express provision is contained in the law authorizing such payment. On yesterday I telegraphed the Second Assistant Postmaster-General asking by what authority such payments are made. To that telegram I received the following

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON:

POST-OFFICE, February 18, 1967.

Answering telegram: The original significance of mail includes the sack in which the mail matter is carried. This was decided to be true by Federal courts in 1830 and 1849 and a State court in 1878. Under the general laws authorizing payment for transportation of the mails, mail sacks have been and are held by established custom, and as supported by judicial decisions, to be part of the mails. No distinction is made against empty sacks, the carriage of which are necessary to mail transportation.

W. S. SHALLENDERGER.

W. S. SHALLENBERGER, Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

The cases relied on to sustain the construction placed upon the statutes as authorizing payment for transportation of empty sacks are as follows:

Wynen v. Schappert (6 Daly, p. 558).

In this case the word "mail" is defined as follows:

The word mail means the carriage of letters by public authority whether applied to the bag in which they are put or the vehicle or other means employed for their carriage and delivery.

This case presented the question whether due diligence had been used in the transmission of a note for collection by delivery to a letter carrier.

United States v. Wilson and Porter (1 Baldwin, p. 105).

This case hinged upon the proposition whether on an indict-ment charging a robbery of the mail the evidence must show that the "whole mail" was robbed. This contention was farfetched, and the decision in the case really throws no light on the subject in controversy, except in so far as it defines the word "mail." The court said:

word "mail." The court said:

It is contended that inasmuch as the indictment charges a robbery of the mail, the evidence must show that the whole mail must be robbed; that though robbing part of the mail is the same offense, yet the indictment not so laying the " "robbery, the defendant can not be convicted. It is said that by mail the law means all the bags then in the stage containing letters, papers, or packages. We can not assent to this proposition. By a mail is meant a bag, valise, or portmanteau used in the conveyance of letters, papers, packages, and so forth, by any person acting under the authority of the Postmaster-General from one post-office to another; each bag so used is a mail, of which there may be several in the same vehicle, as the way mail, the general, the letter, or the newspaper mail. " "The court have no doubt that robbing the person intrusted with any one bag, valise, or portmanteau used for the purpose aforesaid is a robbery within the express words of the law. " "
United States v. Marselis, Case No. 15724 (26 Fed. Cases).

United States v. Marselis, Case No. 15724 (26 Fed. Cases).

This case involved the construction of the terms "mail" and "post-office," in the trial of the defendant on an indictment for stealing mail. It throws no real light on the question as to whether our statute in providing for payment to railroads for the transportation of the mails intended also to pay for the transportation of empty sacks after the mails had been delivered. It might be contended that in compliance with its contract to deliver the mail the railroads would be under no obligation to return empty sacks or to remove the same from one post-office to another when desired by the Government for use again in transporting the mail; that for this reason the Government might be compelled to pay an additional sum for hauling the empty sacks. The question as to whether empty sacks are, in fact, mail seems susceptible of but one answer. Whether the Government should continue to pay for the transportation of empty bags, the same as if they contained mail, or whether they should be carried without cost to the Government in view of the large sums which the Government pays for transporting the mails, or whether they should be transported at less cost, are all subjects which this House might well consider and determine.

The rule adopted yesterday anticipates that a point of order will be made against all provisions in the bill relating to the proposed reduction in the compensation to railroads for transporting the mails. I am not yet convinced that this House will be denied the right to vote upon any of these questions in this way. I am not sure that any gentleman will make a point of order against their consideration. I regret that the rule does not provide for the consideration of all the recommendations made by the committee in its report to this House. Can not this body be trusted to exercise its judgment upon such questions? Ought we not have the opportunity to consider and determine whether the railroads are overpaid; whether the false average daily weight, as now ascertained, ought to be corrected and the actual daily weight provided for; whether the Government should be made to pay for the carriage of empty mail bags, and if so, what amount?

Both the committee of this House and the Postal Commission have recommended such action.

THE POSTAL COMMISSION.

On page 33 of their report, submitted to this House January 28, 1907, the Postal Commission said:

In our judgment, these empty bags, returned for the purpose of again being filled with paying freight, are vehicles of transit and should not be counted as weight of mail. We think that in this case the analogy of empty crates, baskets, and the like, which are usually returned by the carrier to the shipper free of expense, holds good as to these empty bags, and we accordingly recommend that bags so returned be excluded from the weight of which railway mail compensation is to be computed.

Are we to be denied the right of passing upon the correctness of this recommendation? The contention that empty bags should be excluded is dignified by this report and by the action of the House committee in recommending it. That committee say on page 5 of the report on this bill:

say on page 5 of the report on this bill:

The recommendation for the elimination of empty mail bags from the weights at the times of the general weighing periods is based upon the theory that mail bags are vehicles of freight, and when full payment has been made upon both bag and contents the empty bag should not be again computed as a part of the mail weight when it is being returned to some center for use in the transmission of additional mail. There will always be greater demand at some common centers rather than others for bags in which to transport the mail. The practice has long obtained at the Department, and with this practice the committee offers no change of sending by freight in carload lots empty mail bags to such common centers. There will, however, always exist the necessity of some empty bags being constantly transmitted in compartment cars or railway post-office cars. There is no data upon which to make any estimate as to what the effect in dollars and cents may be by the proposed change of law. It seems to the committee, however, that this change is entirely justified, and the continued practice of shipment by freight of the larger part of the surplus empty mail bags will impose upon the Government the full obligation to do her part in returning these vehicles of freight to common centers and avoid any abuse by overloading the carriers with empty mail bags upon which no payment will be made. The practice which has universally obtained with reference to the return by carriers without extra charge of empty crates, kegs, baskets, and vehicles of like character ought to obtain with reference to the Government in respect to empty mail bags.

By the adoption of all these propositions the annual cost of

By the adoption of all these propositions the annual cost of transporting the mails would be reduced at least $8,000,000. The House ought to pass upon the question whether these reductions should be made. It will only be permitted to vote on one proposition, and that has already been approved in the adoption of the rule submitted yesterday. I have reached the conclusion that there are some discrepancies in the existing statute and some absurdities in the present method of applying it that ought to be eliminated. My humble mind is not able to grasp the proposition that the correct way to arrive at the average daily weight of mails is to weigh it for seven days and divide that total by six. I believe that in the determination of this average weight the statute contemplates that all the mail shall be weighed for a given number of days and the average weight determined by dividing by the number representing the days for which it was in fact weighed; that if the statute contemplates any other course, if it authorizes a weighing for seven days and dividing by six, in order to ascertain the average daily weight, the statute ought to be amended. I may be wrong, but I earnestly believe that this conclusion is correct.

I know that the railroad lobby, which is said to be in evidence in this city, has circulated a large number of printed documents, whereby they attempt to show that the compensation for carrying mails is less than the compensation they receive, all things fairly considered, for freights and express. effort is made to show the process by which this conclusion is If, however, it be a correct one, that of itself does not convince me that the present basis for which mail transportation is paid is correct. Express charges are notoriously high, so extortionate, in my conviction, as to demand remedial action to protect the public against the oppression which these The argument does not appeal to me as being charges inflict. The argument does not appeal to me as being worthy of great consideration, because I am convinced that express charges are excessive, and while the railroads may not have anything to do with fixing these charges, they furnish a false basis upon which to arrive at a fair charge for services rendered the Government in carrying the mails.

It is not my purpose to cripple or embarrass the speedy transportation and delivery of our mails. I look with pride upon the efficient, prompt, and certain delivery of mails in the United I am far from criticising the efficiency of the Post-Office Department in so far as it relates to the manner of handling mail. I look upon our mail system as one of the chief factors in that unparalleled progress which has characterized our country—every section of our country—in recent years. Commerce and education in the United States are deeply indebted to the admirable manner in which communication is had and intelligence disseminated through the mails and post-offices of the country. My purpose is rather to increase than decrease the efficiency of mail transportation and delivery. I believe it is a safe and certain means of raising the standard of our citizenship and exalting the ideals of the American people, but I submit that the railroads of this country, among the chief bene-ficiaries of our institutions and our laws, the recipients of great privileges and almost unlimited favors, ought not to combine to maintain and perpetuate a system of charges against this Government for services rendered to it that is open to grave criticism for unfairness and excess. Let us do what is right to the public as well as to the railroads. Let us readjust the compensation to railroads for carrying mail and place it upon a basis that is fair and consistent with the conditions that now confront us.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy] for five minutes

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to call the attention of the House to the bill (H. R. 25232) entitled "An act to promote the comfort of patrons of hotels, restaurants, cafés, and eating houses in the District of Columbia," known as the "antitipping bill." It reads as follows:

"antitipping bill." It reads as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any guest or patron at any hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house in the District of Columbia to give, or offer to give, to any steward, waiter, porter, or other employee, or for any such steward, waiter, porter, or other employee to solicit or receive, or for any proprietor or manager of any such hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house to knowingly permit any such steward, waiter, porter, or other employee to receive from any such steward, waiter, porter, or other employee to receive from any such guest or patron any gift, compensation, or honorarium other than the regular charges established for such hotel, restaurant, café, or eating house.

SEC. 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not less than $5 nor more than $500.

I introduced this bill in all sincerity and expect to bring it before the House next District day for its consideration. believe it a necessity and a much-needed reform, not only in the city of Washington, but the entire country. While we can not invade the States, yet we can, in a measure, make this one of the greatest and most desirable cities in which to live, or to visit, on the face of the earth; and I have no doubt when we set the example the States will follow, and we will drive from our shores a low species of bribery.

Why an honest hotel man will permit this nefarious and, I am compelled to say, degrading practice is only conjecture. I do not believe any man who permits his guests to be held up in such fashion is honest. I am not unmindful of the fact that this measure has been branded as freak or foolish legislation; but, sir, have we so soon forgotten that it became necessary for the Congress to legislate against the old negro who stands in front of the Baltimore and Ohio depot with his blind horse and much-worn cab, in the rain, in the cold, and in the snow, and we wrote it into law what his charges should be for any and every service he might render? Was that foolish legislation? Why did we do it? That all men might be treated equally; to prevent discrimination; that the old negro might not "make flesh of one and fowl of another." These are some of the reasons which induced me to introduce the bill, together with others to which I will call attention.

Mr. Chairman, I am also aware that there is opposition to this character of legislation. I find the hotel proprietors not doing an honest business, and that class of waiters who expect to hold up every guest that happens to pass his way, and those who have acquired wealth suddenly, and ofttimes improperly, who want to display it on every occasion by giving it away and lighting cigars with five and ten dollar bills, and that class of men who are spending their father-in-law's fortune trying to find a brand of whisky which will taste as good coming up as going down, as well as that class of people whose chief asset in gaining admission into so-called "society" is in his number of servants. I can understand why the first class referred to oppose me, and they drive the waiters to this hold-up. In addition to paying the regular charges, which are based on the salary of a Congressman, exorbitant and beyond all reason, we are expected to pay the salaries of the stewards, waiters, porters, bell boys, chambermaids, elevator boys, and, in fact, all the help round and about. I find that the salaries of waiters in the city of Washington range from 50 cents per day to $1 per day; the proprietor calculates the value per month of tips and arranges the waiter's salary accordingly; the higher the tips the lower the salary. This can better be told by the following article clipped from the Star, published at Schenectady, N. Y., which was written by a well-known correspondent:

[Special to the Star.]

Washington, February 13, 1907.

"Tip? No tip!" Washington walters and hotel keepers are excited, while the public is curiously interested in the fate of the measure introduced by Representative Murphy, of Missouri, prohibiting the giving or taking of tips in hotels or restaurants. For the benefit of their patrons the proprietors of hotels say they favor such a measure, but for the benefit of their waiters they oppose it. Why a hotel proprietor should favor such a measure is not clear. When one sees a smooth-faced, cleanly, white waiter deftly attending to his wants, he instinctively compliments the hotel proprietor for employing such excellent help and regards the "tip" as a token of appreciation for specially attentive service. It does not occur to the guest, as a general rule, that he pays at the desk for this service and then pays the waiter. The rate of pay for the highest class waiters in Washington is $30 per month. In other words, the proprietor pays $1 per day as a sort of retaining fee to insure the presence of the waiter and to recompense him for such small services as he may perform for the hotel itself, such as removing solled dishes and table linen. But for whatever the waiter does for the guest the latter is expected by the hotel proprietor and the waiter to pay out of his own pocket, in addition to settling a bill which is always high enough to include first-class service. The tariff is usually 10 per cent of the bill on large checks, but on small checks, say from $1 to $2, it is 25 cents. If the check is less than a dollar, the guest is expected to give the change to the waiter. The interests of the hotel proprietor and the waiter are thus identical, for as the tip is generally regulated by the size of the check the larger the bill the larger the tip. No complaint has been heard recently of the practice which formerly prevailed to some extent, under which the waiter made a false addition in lead pencil and thus cheated the guest in addition to getting a tip. So much complaint was made of this custom that it was practically abandoned and is no longer practiced in first-class places. Nor is it customary for waiters in Washington to pay the hotel proprietors for the privilege of waiting on their customers in return for tips, as is the case in some places. They are confined to the gentle proprietors for the privilege of waiting on their customers in return for tips, as is the case in some places. They are confined to the gentle practice of frowing on the modest tipster and of smiling on the more generous.

The writer fails to remember, in the course of a long experience with Washi

Washington hotels, a case where a man paid a bill at the table without tipping the waiter, so he can not say what happens under such circumstances.

At the so-called "family hotels," where the patronage is largely confined to permanent guests, the tariff for tips is $2 per week for the man and $1 per week for each member of the family. Thus, where a family has a table at which sit a man, wife, and two daughters the waiter is expected to receive a weekly honorarium of $5. Of this the head walter collects from 20 to 50 per cent. This rate varies from about haif as much to double, according to the standing of the hotel. Then there is the weekly tip to the chambermaid of from one to two dollars per room or bed. The head porter gets his every time a piece of baggage is moved, and the porter moving the baggage is duly rewarded. Tips to the head porter average $1, and the active porter receives 25 to 50 cents per large pieces.

There is no cut-and-dried system of feeing the bell boys. Permanent guests in the smaller hotels try to get one or two bell boys on their staff and fee them by the week. Transients have to take their chances and fee all the time. The schedule runs like this: Bringin in bag and carrying to room, 25 cents; same on departure; pitcher ice water, 10 cents; drinks in rooms, 10 to 25 cents; brushing coats, 10 cents; stationery, 10 cents; other services in proportion. The usual tip to "pages" is 10 cents. They call the visitors' cards. Pages who open the door to the telephone booths get 5 to 10 cents. Elevator boys in family hotels expect 25 cents to 50 cents per week from each guest or family. In the large European hotels they seldom receive anything.
The custom of "tipping" the cook does not prevail here, although after a dinner party it is considered "au fait" to remember him or her. As the cook does not come in contact with the guests, she or he depends on the hotel proprietors for their wages, together from what they rake off from the waiters. It is also considered fashionable to tip the head

occasionally it should be five. In addition, he gets a percentage of the waiters' tips, and in most cases at least receives something from the proprietor.

The hotels in Washington have another pleasant custom which appeals strongly to the guests. The regular price for a telephone call from a pay station is 5 cents. In most cities the hotels supply telephones in the rooms as an accommodation to the guests, but in Washington they are made a source of considerable revenue. In coming to Washington the visitor is advised to allow at least 10 and preferably 20 per cent of what he calculates on spending for tips.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that when a guest goes to a hotel, a café, or an eating house he is entitled to the same treatment accorded any other; no better, no worse. The idea that a boniface should be privileged to compel his guests to endure black-mail in silence in order to secure food and service for which they pay the aforesaid boniface prices out of all proportion to what they get is preposterous as well as outrageous. The waiters contend that tips are "for politeness, for prompt service," etc. I am constrained to ask for what does the traveling public pay the proprietor? Is it not his business to furnish polite and attentive help as much as clean table linen and drinking water? Is a guest not entitled to expect a pitcher of ice water without feeing the bell boy?

My attention has been directed to a hearing had before the District Commissioners on this bill the 16th of this month, which was attended by about fifty persons, composed of hotel managers, waiters, and a hired attorney. I say "attorney" because we Missourians differentiate between a lawyer and an attorney, in that Blackstone defines a "lawyer" as a person learned in the law, our statutes defining an "attorney" as one admitted to practice law. This hearing was remarkable. Using the language of a Senator, they could get a patent on the arguments there made for their novelty, yet they couldn't patent them because they are of no value. "Tipping is a condition that has existed from time immemorial, and I do not think it ever can be stopped," said the hired attorney. What, Mr. Chairman! Have these people reached such a degree of degradation that they have no respect for law? Are they over, above, be-yond, or greater than the laws of the country? I do not believe this gentleman was commissioned to make such a confession or admission on behalf of or for the people he professed to represent. "Is it necessary," Commissioner Macfarland, who presided at the hearing, asked, "that patrons should give tips in order to receive proper attention and to receive courteous treat-"In a great many respects it is," answered the attorment?"

That very answer, Mr. Chairman, not only demonstrates the necessity for, but the wisdom of, this character of legislation. When a patron must dig down into his pocket and produce additional compensation in order to receive proper attention and courteous treatment at the hands of the employees of men whose duty it is to furnish such to his guests, it is time for the Congress to call a halt on such a high-handed procedure. It has no place in a civilized country, and properly belongs to the criminal catalogue. Now, let us see what one of the head waiters advanced at this hearing as a reason why this bill should not pass:

"Unless patrons give tips they have to make a howl for everything they want, and there is not much pleasure in their eating" was the amusing statement made by J. L. Dickinson, head waiter at Harvey's.

"Two men enter a hotel for dinner. One of them is known to be a free tipper, and the other one of those who don't believe in tipping. They sit at separate tables and the first one has his meal served up to him nice and steaming long before the other man. The latter has to ask to have his glass refilled with water; he has to ask for more butter; in fact, he has to ask for everything, while the first man does not."

"Then, unless a patron pays this compulsory tip," Commissioner Macfarland interrupted, "he doesn't get the service?"

"I regret to say he does not," the head waiter replied.

This is the way, I suppose, business is carried on at Harvey's, and ought to be an incentive for every Congressman, every Washingtonian, and every visitor to patronize that would-be fashionable café. But it is no worse, Mr. Chairman, than the New Willard, the Arlington, the Raleigh, and some others I might mention, yet it is better than the Shoreham. But in all of them—mark what I say—in all of them a failure to tip or give what is considered a proper tip results nine times out of ten in an insult, and it makes no difference whether it be a gentleman or lady guest. I speak from experience, and Members on this floor have related the same character of treatment to me since I introduced this bill. I believe we should provide by law that our good women can go into any hotel or café without being subjected to a "hold up" or an insult.

There is only one gratifying feature of the tipping system; it creates caste. No one receives a tip without instinctively feeling a lowering of his public standing; no one bestows a tip without feeling he is superior to the recipient. Not only this, but tips breed graft, and, I quote the following from Theo Waters in

Everybody's Magazine:

Everybody's Magazine:

But it is the nature of the graft that the extorter has always in his turn to meet extortion. If the waiter does not share his harvest with his helper, the "bus" boy will complain to the head waiter, and the latter will also demand a share. Indeed, I was told by several New York waiters that their salaries are continually drawn upon by the head waiters, who thus exact their share of the patrons' gratuities. The method is as follows: The head waiter borrows sums of money from the regular waiters, and if the latter demand repayment they soon find themselves out of a job. A waiter working in a Chicago hotel told me that unless he tipped the chef constantly he got the wrong end of the joint, thus lessening his chance of pleasing his customer. Still another waiter complained of having to contribute part of his earnings to the cashier, on pain, in case of refusal, of having his "change" handed to him in such denominations as would make it inconvenient for the patron to give him a proper tip.

It is not necessary to assume that waiters are, as a class, deliberately dishonest. Such is not the case. But one can not cling to the spokes of a moving wheel without losing one's sense of perspective, and many a waiter who would scorn to steal from his neighbor condones these practices merely because they are the accepted way of the world.

The wage rate for waiters in hotels in large cities is usually $1 a day, but some of the biggest hotels in New York pay but $25 a month, and most of this, the waiters complain, ebbs back into the managerial till by reason of an elaborate system of fines which covers everything that a waiter may or may not do, from laying his tablecloth crooked to turning his toes inward. So that between the head waiters and the fining system it would seem that ordinary waiters see but little of their salaries. And in some hotels waiters as well as minor employees are deprived of wages and given a commission on all wine sold. In one large metropolitan restaurant they receive 6 per cent

Why, Mr. Chairman, in the older countries tipping is called "the great evil of America." I submit herewith an article which appeared in a Washington paper on September 16, 1906:

LONDON, September 15, 1906.

London newspapers have not yet finished their "silly season" discussing about whether the tipping nuisance is greater in the United States than in England. It is agreed that when Americans "learn the ropes" they find tipping cheaper in London than in New York, for here a waiter is often satisfied with a tip of 4 or 6 cents for a slight service, whereas in New York he would turn up his nose at anything under a dime.

Augustus Van Biene, the 'cello player, in a letter to The Mail, declares that the tipping imposition is greater in the United States than anywhere else.

Mr. Van Biene writes:

"England is the European country where tipping is the least indulged. In Australia tipping is hardly known.

"But the country where tipping is a curse is America, and if you do not tip you get nothing done. You ring your bell for the bell boy to bring you a jug of ice water; he brings it up and expects the humble, but necessary, nickel. If you do not tip him you may ring your bell from now till Christmas and he will not come up, and if you complain to the manager you are told it 'will be seen to,' but it never is.

"You dine or eat in the restaurant and you are expected to tip at least a quarter for every meal. If you do not, the waiter will pass you by. You may call him from now till Easter Monday and he does not come; and, again, if you complain to the manager, you are told it 'will be seen to,' but it never is.

"When you are traveling no porter takes any notice of you until ten minutes before you arrive at your destination. He then takes a brush and gives you a kind of apology for brushing, and expects his tip—not less than 25 cents, more often 50.

"Porters there are none; you must do everything yourself. Here in this country, when I arrive at a place, I give the porter my 'cello to put in a cab, and I give him 6 cents, and he says, 'Thank you, sir.' You try to offer a man 6 cents in America. He won't say anything—he will 'chuck' it at you."

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see who, besides myself and the Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see who, besides myself and the Committee on the District of Columbia, favors this legislation. The following resolutions speak for themselves:

The following resolutions speak for themselves:

Whereas the custom of giving and receiving what are known in common parlance as "tips" is un-American and has a tendency to lower the standard of American citizenship by placing upon the recipients of "tips" the stigma of beggary; and

Whereas the act of giving "tips" assumes that the giver of the "tips" is of a higher rank, class, or standing than the recipients thereof, thus creating a feeling of class distinction or social inequality, which is at war with the principles of republican institutions; and

Whereas the solicitation of "tips" places upon respectable vocations the badge of servility; and

Whereas the practice of "tipping" has reached such enormous proportions that the service of stewards, waiters, porters, and other employees of hotels, restaurants, cafés, and eating houses in the District of Columbia has become discriminatory, unfair, and unjust to guests of said places who are financially unable or who have the courage to refuse to thus pay tribute for service to which they are of right entitled: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Business Men's Association of the District of Columbia hereby indorses and earnestly recommends the passage of the bill known as H. R. 25232, having for its object the doing away with the "tip" evil and the promotion of the comfort of guests or patrons of hotels, restaurants, cafés, and other eating places in the District of Columbia.

Resolved further, That the secretary of this association transmit copies of this resolution to the Committees on the District of Columbia of the Senate and the House of Representatives and a copy to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The association adopting these resolutions is composed of the business men of the District of Columbia, having a membership of about 600, among whom are found such well-known men as A. Leftwich Sinclair, Judge Kimball, Dr. H. L. E. Johnson, Allan D. Albert, J. M. Brown, James F. Oyster, Charles W. Linkins, and C. C. Lancaster. In transmitting these resolutions to me the writer said:

There is a crying need for legislation upon this subject in the District, and I trust that you may be able to bring about the passage of your bill during the present session.

your bill during the present session.

The Washington Post, on February 3, 1907, in an editorial bearing a headline "A plea for reform," said:

Few doctors of law in Congress or out of Congress believe that Mr. Murphy's bill to abolish the tipping evil is good law, but all realize that it is good policy. The traveling public ought to have some rights in this country. When a man opens a hotel for the accommodation of guests he has first procured a license from the powers that be allowing him to engage in the business, and he must be a man of good character, with a reputation for honesty, probity, and good demeanor. The Government is responsible for him, and his license is warrant to his guests that every one dealing with him shall have equal and fair play.

his guests that every one dealing with him shall have equal and fair play.

But it is notorious, from ocean to ocean, in our great country, that the guest who refuses to "tip" does not get fair play, just as the competitor, without a rebate, could not get fair play in a rivalry with the Standard Oil trust. The tip is not voluntary; it is extorted. Every guest knows that he will be given a cold potato, tough steak, viliatious coffee, impossible toast, and insufferable eggs if he does not bribe the menial who waits on him. It is called infamous to bribe an appropriation through Congress to discharge a just debt owed by the Government. The creditor has a right to his debt without fee or reward to anybody, and the guest of the hotel has a right to his dinner without fee or reward to a waiter if his credit is good at the clerk's desk.

But this tipping will not be abolished. There is too much mingled vanity and cowardice in the land for that. Yet it should be regulated, and it would be well enough to begin it in this very town of Washington, D. C.

The Washington Times, under "Pass the antitipping bill"

The Washington Times, under "Pass the antitipping bill" headline on February 12, 1907, contained the following editorial:

Representative Murphy, of Missouri, has had the courage to put into legislation the convictions most of us hold secretly. His antitipping bill is no joke. It is only an honest and wholly praiseworthy effort to directly correct an abuse—a character-destroying, debasing, fradulent abuse—which has developed indirectly and saddled itself on the lent abuse—which has developed indirectly and saddled itself on the country as a curse.

The tip strikes both at him that gives and him that takes.

We all know either the sense of smothered protest or the cheap pride with which it is given. In the one case we are paying twice for being served. In the other we are indulging the littlest, most fatuous, most contemptible pride in making a show of our ability to give a fellow-man, one like us, a free-born American citizen, a dime or a quarter. In either event we are loser by the operation.

But the tip is more an evil when viewed from the standpoint of him that takes it. He is performing a known service. He is ostensibly an employee of the hotel or café where he works. His pay is included—generously—in the prices on the menu card. It is an honest service, and is paid for honestly. But where the tip flourishes this man will bow and scrape, wipe off invisible crumbs from the cloth, fill your glass when you don't care to drink, make a menial and a lickspittle of himself, and then with mock humility hold out his hand like a beggar at the corner. The whole transaction is hypocritical, un-American, and unmanly.

Of course, there will be a defense of it, and some waiters will not hesitate to come forward in its behalf. Well, there is nothing to prevent men from selling their American birthright if they choose. Nor is there any way to make men refuse to pay twice for the same thing by moral suasion. But there can be no question that neither such a waiter (with his total lack of self-esteem) nor such a patron (with his petty, stuck-up sufficiency in his pocketbook) ought not to be allowed to corrupt others.

That, from a casual reading, is the foundation of Mr. Murphy's bill to prevent tipping in the District of Columbia. Similar legislation has been enacted for other jurisdictions, including this Representative's home State, and so far found to be not any more ridiculous than the railway rate bill or any other reform. This bill, or another of the same purpose, ought to pass, and that speedily.

One evil, Mr. Chairman, results in another. In other words,

One evil, Mr. Chairman, results in another. In other words, one crime leads to another. A man who will steal or rob will kill. I can remember in my own State, Missouri, in the city of St. Louis, some time ago, one waiter shot another in a café, resulting from a quarrel over a tip. The following special appeared in the Washington Post last Thursday:

NEW YORK, February 13.

New York, February 13.

Mannie Frey, special policeman, died in the Gouverneur Hospital this morning from a bullet wound in his head. Gustave Weir, another special policeman, is locked up. Frey was shot just after midnight outside a dance hall at 180 Suffolk street.

Mannie Frey lived at 82 Second street, and was stationed in front of the Café Liberty, or Little Hungary, on East Houston street. Weir was on duty at 180 Suffolk street, and lives at 441 East Ninth street.

There had not been the best of feeling between the two policemen. They fell out about which one should call the carriages for the guests of the Little Hungary, and as there was some profit in this in the way of tips for the successful one, there was much rivalry between them. Weir's post was just around the corner from Frey's, and it seems that Frey thought he was interfering with the source of his tips. There was a violent quarrel between them over this.

Frey was walking along Suffolk street about midnight when he encountered Weir. They went up the alley, and there they became involved in an argument. What they said may never be known, but before long there was a shot and Frey fell forward on his face. A bullet had plowed through his cap into his forehead, carrying away part of the insignia of his cap.

Is this character of legislation new? The States of New York

Is this character of legislation new? The States of New York and Wisconsin have laws against tipping. Nebraska has an antitreating law. The following special which appeared in a Washington paper on January 1 last might be interesting:

LONDON, December 31, 1906

Great Britain has a new crime, or will have on January 1, 1907. Hitherto the law has not leaned too heavily on the givers and the receivers of bribes, but now an act has been adopted somewhat similar to the "antitipping" act of the State of New York.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in not a State in this country can we tip a voter at an election, a judge for rendering an opinion, a juror for deciding a case, a legislator for casting a vote, a sheriff or official for doing or not doing certain acts. We prohibit many of these things by act of Congress. In this body we cry loud and long about discriminations, and pass laws to prevent them. Is there a more unjust discrimination for a man of wealth to receive "proper attention and courteous treatment" against his less-fortunate fellow-man stopping at the same hotel, paying the same rate of charges, because of a lavish display of his wealth? The railroad rate bill was enacted for this very principle. But, oh, some say the law is unconstitutional. You can't interfere with personal liberties. You can't prevent me from giving away my own money; just as well try to prevent Carnegie from giving away libraries.

Mr. Chairman, a man can do as he pleases so long as he does not interfere with another's personal liberty or welfare or infringe upon the rights of others. Let a man put on female attire and walk down Pennsylvania avenue. What would be the result? Arrest and punishment. Burn your own house, and you are amenable to the law for arson. Attempt suicide, and you are confined in some character of asylum. Do anything that has an evil tendency, and the law meets you with a punishment, and laws of such character are being passed every day. Laws in some jurisdictions forbid the giving away of whisky and certain drugs, and even extend to cigarettes. Carnegie can establish and endow libraries throughout the world; but he could not legally establish or endow a brothel or a bawdy house in a single civilized community, however remote it might be; he could not establish nor endow a saloon or a tippling shop in Maine or Kansas. Laws, Mr. Chairman, are founded on justice. It was never my idea of justice that one man should be permitted to put his hand into another's pocket and take that which did not belong to him, and when you permit this evil and pernicious system of tipping you sanction that very thing and give one man an advantage over another. Pass a law of this character and you will do more to make this a greater Washington than anything else you could do. In Chase's Theater, in Washington, you are greeted with this ad-

Positively no fees of any kind are permitted in this theater, as everything is free after purchasing your ticket.

What do we find there? Proper attention and courteous treatment; a ladies' reception room, with maid in charge, with remedies for sudden illness or slight indisposition; gentlemen's room, with porter in attendance, where every care and atten-tion is given to patrons, including the polishing of shoes; pub-lic writing desk, with stationery, daily newspapers, current magazines; messenger and carriage calls for patrons; in case of rain umbrellas are loaned. No tips allowed for anything. What is the result? Every afternoon and night the theater is crowded with the very best people living in and coming to Washington. Pass this bill, and Washington will be known from the Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific as a place where graft and bribery do not hold full sway in public places.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that France can not be judged by Paris, nor England by London; but this great country of ours ought to be judged by its capital and as the one spot under the shining sun where there is "a square deal for every man," be

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to a resolution—a concurrent resolution—passed recently by the Texas legislature. The resolution is a request to the Congress to enact such laws as will enable the Federal Government to enter into such trade arrangements with foreign nations as will afford the best possible market for live stock and its products and farm products of this country, and expressing entire confidence in the President of the United States relative thereto.

This expression of confidence in the President of the United States I desire to call the attention of the House to. There is another expression in this resolution that I would direct the attention of the House to, and it is this:

That the law fixing these schedules-That is, the tariff schedules may be safely modified so as to afford a consideration for making such trade agreements with foreign nations without any injury to the just rights of the industries of this country which are entitled to protection.

The point is that the Texas legislature goes upon record that there are certain industries in this country which the to protection. Another feature of the resolution is this: They to protection. Another feature of the United States, "as a there are certain industries in this country which are entitled consideration for such agreement, to grant, give, and make such concessions and modifications in the tariff schedules on articles of commerce as will enable this Government to secure the most favorable trade relations," etc.

They want this power placed in the hands of the President of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, according to the Texas legislature, here is the great live-stock interest and the farming interest of Texas expressing entire confidence in the President of the United States. The protected interests of this country also have entire confidence in the President of the United States. Why, the steel trust has confidence in the President of the United States. Why, the The American woolen-goods trust has confidence in the President of the United States. The leather trust, the lumber trust, and all the stand-patters in this country have entire confidence in the President of the United States that he will not permit the Dingley tariff rates to be interfered with in any manner. Now, here are the live-stock interests and the farming interests of Texas, if these resolutions properly express it, also having entire confidence in the President of the United States. I want to suggest that there is a misplaced confidence somewhere. Either farming interest and live-stock interest are mistaken in their confidence in the President or the trust interests are mistaken. I want to suggest to the Texas legislature that, in my opinion, their confidence in the President of the United States along these lines is entirely misplaced and that the confidence of the trusts is well founded. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that those of this country, and certainly I am one of them, who be-lieve in freer trade relations with all the world and larger world markets for the product of farm, pasture, factory, and mine will make a mistake when they seek relief through special trade agreements and abandon a general assault all along the ene-You can not reduce a single Dingley tariff schedule by a trade agreement that you can not reduce by a general tariff revision. I call attention to the situation with reference to Germany. Now, Germany has a surplus of refined sugar. We need that surplus and have to pay for it with the tariff added, largely for the benefit of the sugar trust. Now, Germany needs our food products, meat, flour, etc.

Now, if you undertake to reach this situation with a special trade agreement, what opposition do you find? The sugar trust, and this trust calls to its aid all the other trusts fed and sustained by the Dingley rates, notably the steel trust, the leather trust, the farming implements trust, the lumber trust, and the others. They all make common cause. This is abundantly proved by the failure of the trusts to carry out the express promise of the Dingley law-that its high rates should be reduced by reciprocity treaties. All efforts at reciprocity have been scorned by the trusts. Their programme is the President's programme; it is the stand-pat programme. I repeat, our only hope is general charge all along the line for juster and lower tariff rates.

It may be true that the principle of protection is so embedded in our policy as that it can not be overthrown, but there is such a thing as greater justice and equity in protection, which is being demanded now all over the country, and it is only through the success of this movement that any hope is offered for extended foreign markets or for any justice and equity to be meted out to our farmers and stockmen, who have been all too long so unjustly weighted down with tariff exactions. I ask that this resolution and the letter accompanying it be printed as a part of my remarks.

The letter and resolutions are as follows:

House of Representatives, State of Texas, Austin, February 15, 1907.

Hon. Oscar W. Gillespie,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Herewith I inclose you house concurrent resolution No. 7, adopted by the house and senate.

Very respectfully,

Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.
Thirtieth Legislature of Texas.

House concurrent resolution No. 7, requesting Congress to enact such laws as will enable the Federal Government to enter into trade arrangements with such foreign nations as will afford the best possible markets for live stock and its products and farm products of this country, and expressing entire confidence in the President of the United States relative thereto.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), Third States relative thereto.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), Whereas the live-stock producing interests of the United States are suffering material loss by reason of the fact that they are practically deprived of access to the markets of continental Europe for the sale of live stock; and

Whereas there is no provision of law authorizing the administrative departments of the Government of the United States to make any trade agreements with foreign nations favorable to an extension of our foreign trade in live stock and the products of live stock, as well as other products of the farm and ranch; and

Whereas it is the belief of the farmers and live-stock raisers of this country that it is competent for Congress to pass a law or laws which will empower the President of the United States, as a consideration for trade agreements with foreign countries, to grant such concessions in the schedules of tariff on articles imported or to be imported from such foreign countries the products of the farms and ranches of this country without reasonable restrictions; and Whereas we believe that the foreign trade in the products of the farms and ranches in this country has been sacrificed by the Inauguration of schedules of tariff on manufactured articles, and that the law fixing those schedules may be safely modified sufficiently to afford a consideration for making such trade agreements with foreign nations without any injury to the just rights of the industries of this country which are entitled to protection; and

Whereas that fair protection which the law should afford, but which unhappily it does not afford, to the live-stock and farming interests of the markets of the world to the products of the nature, and whereas the live-stock producing interests of this country which are entitled to a much consideration on the part of

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Frederick Landis having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 92. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit José March Duplat to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point;

S. 8400. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904;

S. 7903. An act granting an increase of pension to Catherine De Rosset Meares :

S. 8511. An act granting a pension to George L. Dancy; S. 8508. An act granting an increase of pension to Miranda W. Howard:

S. 8314. An act granting an increase of pension to James P. Worrell:

S. 7993. An act granting an increase of pension to George E. Purdy

S. 7283. An act granting an increase of pension to William T.

Cooper; and S. 1217. An act for the relief of the estate of Henry Ware, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 48) to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested: H. R. 5290. An act providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use the few minutes to call attention to a practice that seems to prevail in the House against which I want to protest. At the beginning of the session, when the rules are adopted, the Committee on War Claims is named; and the rules provide that one Friday in each month shall be devoted to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar from the War Claims Committee. I have now been in this House for six years, and it is my observation that the War Claims Committee does not receive fair and courteous treatment. Bills reported from that committee are smothered in effect. It seems that either an adjournment is taken over that day, a special rule is adopted for that day, or something else, so as to crowd out the War Claims Calendar; and if, perchance, we get an occasional day, a systematic filibuster deprives us of all results.

It is not so with other committees. The other day we passed about 700 pension bills in about two hours. We devoted a whole day to the consideration of one bill on the War Claims Calendar and accomplished nothing. Now, I am for pensions. I believe they are just. It may be that they have become a fad in this House; it may be that they are carried to an extreme, but I am not here to protest against that. I am here, however, to insist that the business from the War Claims Committee shall hereafter receive the same courteous consideration and treatment that is accorded to business coming from other committees. The gentlemen composing the membership of that committee are just as worthy of the presumption of honest purpose and integrity of action as that which is accorded to any other committee, and I want to give notice and place it upon the record that I shall for this session waive the rights that I have under the rules; but at the next session of Congress, if there is a substantial business upon the War Claims Calendar and it is sought to smother it, after that day "Jordan will be a hard road to travel" for legislation in this House. [Applause.] I want to serve notice on those in authority, the Speaker, the Committee on Rules, and those who have the management of affairs, that business on the War Claims Committee at the next session of Congress must receive just and fair consideration, and if it is denied, then legislation in this House on all propositions will have to be in strict accordance with the rules. A word to the wise is sufficient. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the Chair how much time is still unconsumed on this side?

It was understood that there was to be an equal division of the time to-day

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McGavin). The gentleman has used twenty-two minutes so far this morning.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. How much time have we?

The CHAIRMAN. The general debate closes at 4 o'clock. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I desire the Chair to take control of the time which is left to this side of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. My recollection is that this morning I yielded only about thirty minutes. The gentleman has yielded how many minutes?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand, twenty-two minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is practically an equal use of the time thus far.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is immaterial as to the exact number of minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has about one hour and thirty-five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. So many requests have been made for time that I find it impossible to proceed with this debate along intelligent lines in the discussion of the bill itself without limiting the number of speeches on this side. The minority members of the committee up to this time have not had an opportunity to be heard. I therefore desire that the Chair take control of the time which I have and divide it equally between three members of the committee, recognizing first the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd], next the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Griggs], and next the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley], and permit those gentlemen to use all the time which I now have.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to state to the gentleman from Tennessee that there are two members of the committee, Messrs. Steenerson and Stafford, to whom I desire to yield, fifty minutes to Mr. Steenerson and forty-five to Mr. Stafford. If we should now use an hour and thirty-five minutes on a side, it would just make the fifty and forty-five minutes for this side.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is entirely agreeable to me, and the gentlemen can alternate in the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that if he should yield thirty minutes to each of the three gentlemen, that would just about consume all the time he has.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is immaterial as to the number of minutes, so it is equally divided. I yield thirty minutes to each of the gentlemen, and request that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] be first recognized.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill carries the largest appropriation ever provided in a post-office appropriation bill. It is astonishing how rapidly the expenses of the postal department have grown. It is equally astonishing to observe how the receipts of that Department have increased. The receipts and expenditures of this great service have doubled within ten years, a very astounding fact.

No branch of the public service directly affects more people than the Post-Office Department. The mail is carried by the swiftest means of transportation to every village and hamlet in the land. It is delivered at the door of the person who resides in the city and at the gate of the farmer in the interior. It finds its way to the far off Alaska and is delivered at or near every mining camp in that undeveloped region. It reaches every part of the Hawaiian Islands and is transported across the seas to the remotest parts of the world. Wherever civilization has blazed the path of progress, wherever men are congregated for business pursuits, and wherever intelligence is sought by an English-speaking people this Government delivers the mail. Not alone is it taken to those of our own tongue, but in every nation and in every clime among all classes of men wherever our Yankee ingenuity has found a hold and has sought to de business among the people mail from the United States is received and delivered.

The amount carried in this bill for the support of the postal system for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next may be summarized in millions of dollars as follows:

Postmasters' salaries	$25, 500, 000 24, 000, 000
Assistant postmasters, clerks, messengers, and janitors in post-offices Pneumatic-tube service Rent, light, and fuel in post-offices Rural mail carriers Railway mail clerks Star route service Railway mail pay and railway post-office cars Foreign mails All other items	28, 300, 000 1 250 000
Total	209, 400, 000

In last year's law it was provided that rural agents charged with the examination of rural routes should be placed under the supervision of the chief inspector, and thereafter to be known and recognized as inspectors. I was not in sympathy with that merger. I do not believe yet it was wise, although I am gratified to learn how well it has done. The work of the inspector and the rural agent were entirely dissimilar and required different qualifications. The inspectors seem to feel, in many cases, that they are superior officers to the rural agents and treat them accordingly. The rural agents speak of themselves as "step children." The chief inspector does not share in this sentiment and has the confidence and respect of everyone so far as I have information. He would reprimand any officer, I am sure, guilty of encouraging this spirit of superiority. I have no reference to the very excellent inspector who has charge of the work of post-office inspection in my district.

When the rural agents were under the control of the super-

When the rural agents were under the control of the superintendent of rural free delivery, Mr. Spillman, who, in my judgment, is one of the best officials in the Post-Office Department, there seemed to be a disposition to favor the rural agents where it might be done, but at the present many of them feel that much is done to harass and annoy. None of this has been charged against the chief inspector so far as I know. I hope, however, that these imperfections may be overcome and that good feeling and harmonious effort may unify and fraternize these dissimilar elements.

In the short time that is allotted to me I wish to call attention to some particular features of the pending bill. The first is that city letter carriers shall be increased in their salaries and that there shall be a compulsory system of promotion which, in my judgment, is a very important advance. If this bill becomes a law, the clerk in the first-class office who has an efficient record at the end of the first year, as a matter of course, is promoted into the second grade, and receives $100 increase in salary. This is not dependent upon the whim of the post-master, it is not dependent upon the influence of politicians, but if the individual has discharged his duty he is entitled to promotion as a matter of right; and so it is on up in the first-class office to the clerk having a salary of $1,100. Above that the promotions are dependent, as they are now, upon the individual, but it may be subject to some extent to the influence that may be brought to bear in favor of the particular individual. is the same provision as to second-class offices, excepting the promotions are to $1,000.

This bill also provides that city letter carriers shall be placed on an equal basis, as far as compensation is concerned, with city clerks, and that they shall be exchanged at the same salary from one grade to a like grade in the other. The bill provides for an increase of salary for both the city clerks and the city carriers. This bill carries an increased appropriation for rural letter carriers. It provides for additional compensation to them of $120 each. At the present time the rural letter carrier who carries mail on what is called the "full route" receives compensation not exceeding $720 per annum. If the provisions of this bill should become a law they will receive a salary not exceeding $840 per annum. The theory of the committee in that regard is that the additional $240 above what the city letter carrier would receive in the first grade, or the city clerk shall receive in the first grade, is accounted for in the $240 additional which the rural letter carrier must expend out of his own pocket for the equipment of his team and for its care and maintenance.

It is intended by this salary of $840 to place the rural letter carrier on an equal basis with the carrier in the city in the first grade. The city letter carrier has an opportunity for promotion. The rural letter carrier has no such opportunity. His salary is fixed. We provide a change in this bill in another particular, which strikes me as being very important. Under the existing law a substitute carrier, or an individual performing the duty of a carrier on leave, is permitted to receive not more than at the rate of $600 per annum. We provide in this bill that he shall receive the same salary as the principal. In other words, we increase that from $600 to $840. Those of us who have been brought in contact with the rural carrier and know something of the important duties devolved upon him and the hardships he has to bear, especially upon the average roads of the Mississippi Valley, are impressed with the fact that it is absolutely necessary that the salary of those carriers shall be increased to something like a reasonable compensation.

I wish now to approach another question which greatly concerns the people of the country—the subject of compensation to the railroads for carrying the mails. By the provisions of the pending bill certain reductions are made which will have the effect of lessening the pay which the railroads will receive for this service. There has been a wild clamor from various quarters demanding reduction in various amounts as high as 50 per cent of the present compensation. I am well satisfied that the system of arriving at the compensation is so intricate that few persons are really advised as to the necessity of reduction. This body should not be led into radical procedure to gratify spectacular newspaper writers or to comply with the suggestions of sensational magazine articles. On the other hand, no man should refuse to make reduction simply because such reduction would affect the profits of the railroad companies. question that should be determined is whether the present compensation is reasonable and whether it may properly be increased or decreased. Duty should be performed. If it is made clear that the present rate of pay could be reduced 50 per cent without serious injury to the railroads, no one should hesitate to make the reduction in accordance with what is right. On the other hand, if the Government is not sufficiently compensating the railroads for this valuable service, it should not refuse to increase the compensation. No branch of public service means as much, day by day, to the people of the country as the expediting of the mails.

Commercial interests demand at the hands of the railroads that fast mail trains should be maintained and that the mails shall be distributed through the country with the greatest possible speed. They look with suspicion on any movement which might have the effect of crippling this service. The railroad companies have apparently done all in their power to assist the people in obtaining the best possible mail facilities and an expedition not surpassed in any other service. For this extraordinary facility the Government should not fail to give reasonable compensation. It should, of course, permit no extortion on the Government and should fix no rates which would simply have the effect of filling the coffers of the railroads. This question should be considered in a spirit of fairness, and it is my purpose to try to discuss the reduction proposed in this bill in that spirit.

I think it should be admitted that there have been no special means provided for specific information since 1900. At that time a learned commission of superior men was appointed under act of Congress to investigate the subject of railway mail pay and make report to Congress. The commission was composed of Senators Wolcott, Allison, Chandler, Martin, and Faulkner, and Representatives Loud, Catchings, Fleming, and Moody. The commission, after exhaustive hearings covering a long period of time, assisted by an expert accountant, Prof. H. C. Adams, of the University of Michigan, made report of their inquiry into the subject in three large volumes, and after careful consideration of all the information which they could gather both from the railway experts and Government officers who appeared before them, seven of the nine members reported that there should be no reduction in railway mail pay. Their report was expressed in these words:

Upon a careful consideration of all the evidence and the statements and arguments submitted, and in view of all the services rendered by the railroads, we are of the opinion that the prices now paid to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails are not excessive and recommend that no reduction thereof be made at this time.

Mr. Moody, now Supreme Court justice, in a separate report concurred in the views above expressed, but amongst other things stated:

When the Commission was created it was supposed, upon the faith of statistics furnished by the Post-Office Department itself, that the average cost of the transportation of a pound of mail was 8 cents and that the average rate paid to the railroads for mail matter was 6.58 cents a pound; that the average railway haul was 328 miles, and that the average rate paid to the railroads was 40 cents per ton per mile. Public-spirited citizens, accepting these statistics as accurate, not unnaturally protested that they demonstrated that the railway mail pay was excessive.

In this connection I wish to say that in 1898 I addressed this House on the subject of railway mail pay and based my argument upon the statements just quoted from Justice Moody and took the position then that railway mail pay should be greatly reduced; and if these statistics were true, the present demand for a 50 per cent reduction would not be unreasonable. But what are the facts in this matter? I quote again from Justice Moody in his report:

It appeared that the average rate paid to the railroads for mall matter was 2.75 cents, in stead of 6.58 cents; that the average railway haul was 438 miles, instead of 328 miles, and that the average rate paid to the railroads was 12.567 cents per ton per mile, instead of 40 cents per ton per mile; that such changes in the accepted bases of reasoning should profoundly affect the discussion of the question.

Justice Moody could well make this statement, because the facts would no longer warrant the demands which had been made for reduction of pay, and the proposition to reduce became a more seriously vexed one, and certainly less cause was manifest for any reduction.

Mr. Fleming and Senator Chandler, of the Commission, indorsed the suggestion made by Prof. H. C. Adams that notwithstanding the development had been such as to show but slight if any, excessive pay that there might be a flat reduction in present rates of 5 per cent and a reduction in addition above 5,000 pounds of from 1 to 12 per cent, graded upward on a scale of weights. The report of the Commission made in 1900 seems to have been accepted as final, and no attempt has been made to reduce railway mail pay until this session of Congress. It is true that speeches have been made in favor of it, that the country's attention has been riveted upon it by newspaper articles. but no definite effort had been made to secure the result.

The Postal Commission appointed last summer by act of Congress to investigate postage rates, composed of the following persons, Senators Penrose, Carter, and Clay and Representatives Overstreet of Indiana, Gardner of New Jersey, and Moon of Tennessee, in their report recently made, say:

There is also a widespread belief that the high total cost of the postal service results, in some degree at least, from what is regarded as overpayment to the railways for mall transportation. Much of the controversy as to a proper charge for second-class matter has raged around the question of railway mail pay. So far as this Commission has felt it to be within its authority it has endeavored to formulate just conclusions as to the merits of that controversy. It has accordingly recommended in this report a reduction of mail pay upon dense routes where the great volume of second-class matter permits economies in transportation, and it has also recommended the climination of return empty bags from the computation of weight.

In their recommendations they suggest a reduction of 5 per cent from existing rates between 5,000 and 48,000 pounds of mail, 10 per cent between 48,000 and 80,000 pounds, and designate a flat charge of $18 per ton above the weight of 40 tons. The Post-Office Committee have embodied the same provision in this bill, as suggested by the Commission, excepting that $19 per ton may be paid above 80,000 pounds.

It will be observed that no change in compensation is suggested where the average daily weight of mail is less than 5,000 pounds. There seems to be no demand for such reduction. The impression seems to be that the mails carried in small quanti-ties do not demand decreased pay. This was the opinion of the Postal Commission, as shown by its recommendation, and the pending bill makes no reduction under 5,000 pounds weight. Attention might very properly be called, however, to the compensation which the railroads receive for carrying these smaller amounts of mail. In pay per pound they receive much larger compensation than where greater weight is carried. I submit herewith a table which fully illustrates this statement. In it will be found a statement of the daily weight in pounds, yearly weight, amount of pay per mile, daily pay per mile, and the number of pounds carried 1 mile for 1 cent. This makes an interesting table and shows some strange facts. For example, in the pay for 200 pounds weight the railroads receive compensation of 1 cent for every 17 pounds of mail carried 1 mile, while on a train where 80,000 pounds are carried 365 pounds are carried 1 mile for 1 cent. The table follows:

Daily weight in pounds.	Yearly weight.	Annual pay per mile.	Daily pay per mile.	Number of pounds for 1 cent 1 mile.
200	73,000 182,500 365,000 730,000 1,825,000 17,520,000 29,200,000	$42.75 64.12 85.50 128.25 171.00 630.45 801.37	Cents. 11.7 17.5 23.5 35 47 1.73 2.19	17 28 42 58 106 280 365

If passengers were carried on weight basis, it might be interesting to note the comparison with the mail, and the result would be novel, I am sure. The average weight of a pas-senger is supposed to be 140 pounds. He is permitted to carry senger is supposed to be 140 pounds. He is permitted to carry 150 pounds of baggage, making a total weight of passenger and baggage 290 pounds. This is carried almost anywhere in the United States for 3 cents. This is 25 per cent less weight and three times the compensation that would be paid for carrying the mail over the heavy traffic roads; but where only 200 pounds of daily mail are carried the passenger gets the best of the bargain, for he has a mileage weight seventeen times as great, but only pays three times as much for it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask my friend if there is anything in this bill that fixes the price of passenger rates by weight?

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If there is, I object to it. [Laugh-

Mr. LLOYD. My friend is afraid he will go beyond the limit and have to pay more than the ordinary passenger on account of his excessive weight. He and I would travel some-

Last year the railroads carried 739,000,000 passengers and received $472,000,000 for their transportation. They carried each passenger an average of 32 miles at 2 cents per mile. This on a weight basis would be 145 pounds carried 1 mile for 1 cent.

There was carried 1,100,000 and more tons of mail, and the Government paid $44,490,000 for its transportation. This would be a little over $40 per ton, or about 200 pounds 1 mile for 1 cent for last year.

There has been an attempt to compare express charges with mail transportation, and perhaps it is the nearest to a complete comparison, because mail and express are frequently carried in the same train and under the same circumstances. But it is almost impossible to make a correct comparison between them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley] in a speech that he made on Saturday called attention to a comparison between mail charges and express charges. It is a very interesting comparison, but I think that the explanation that he gives shows beyond question that more is paid for carrying the mail than for carrying express. I quote from the table which he presented:

Table showing and comparing rate received by railways per hundred-weight for transportation of United States mail and rates received for the carriage of express business between points named below.

Allowed railroad companies under last weighing, including the cost of railroad post-office cars.
 By railroads per 100 pounds on all classes of business carried for express companies, including heavy merchandise, fish, live stock, fruit, machinery, etc.

This table which has been furnished by the railroad companies is based upon the statement made by Mr. Julier, of the American Express Company, who is supposed to be the best expert on express rates there is in the United States, and who appeared before the Wolcott Commission in 1899 and gave testimony there. He then put this table which is quoted here in his remarks. It showed that beyond question more is paid per 100 pounds for carrying mail than is paid for carrying and the paid for carrying and the paid for carrying mail than is paid for carr ing express. So that if there is anything in the comparison at all between the carriage of mail and the carriage of express, it shows that if the railroad company can afford to carry the express at the present compensation, then there ought to be a reduction in railway mail pay. The suggestion embodied in the proposed amendment that was voted upon yesterday, providing that there shall be a reduction in weight between 5,000 pounds average daily weight on 48,000 pounds of 5 per cent, and above that 10 per cent, and excepting land-grant roads above a daily average of 48,000 pounds, is a good provision above a daily average of 48,000 pounds, is a good provision as far as it goes as to daily weight. I want to call attention, however, in this connection to one thing with reference to that amendment. It provides that land-grant roads may be excepted where they have an average daily weight of 48,000 pounds, but if their average daily weight is between 5,000 pounds and 48,000 pounds there must be a 5 per cent reduction.

This seems to me entirely unfair to the smaller roads and a benefit that is specifically given to the greater roads. If the land-grant road has mail furnished to it to such an extent as that it will carry daily over 48,000 pounds, it ought to receive greater reduction rather than less. The roads that ought to be cared for, if either of these classes are selected, in my judgment are the land-grant roads whose daily carriage of mail is between 5,000 pounds and the 48,000 pounds rather than the roads whose daily average weight of mail is beyond the 48,000 pounds, but in my opinion all land-grant roads should be excepted from the reduction because they now only receive 80 per cent of full railway pay.

One of the most perplexing problems in connection with the Post-Office Department is the ascertainment of a correct system for the determination of compensation to the railroad com-panies for carrying the mails. The present law has been in existence for over thirty years. It has been attacked at various times by those who are not satisfied with it; other methods of ascertaining have been suggested, but during this long period of time no other method has had any considerable support in either branch of Congress. The interpretation of that law by the Fost Office Department has been upheld by numerous law officers and all the Postmasters-General during that time. The law seems to be rather a strange one. It is based upon the idea that the weight of mail should determine the compensation for its carrying. The vigorous attack recently made by the gentle-man from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] upon the system as it is now carried out is, in my judgment, without foundation in so far as it may reflect upon the administration of that law. The gentleman is correct, as I believe, in demanding a change of the law, but I do not believe that the Postmasters-General of the past are responsible for any loss to the Government by reason of their interpretation of existing law.

The Postmaster-General is required to have the mail weighed for not less than ninety successive working days. This is done to obtain a daily average weight which shall serve as the basis of computation in ascertaining the amounts to be paid to the railroads. The weights during the weighing period are added together and their sum divided by ninety, the number of working days, to secure the average daily weight. On this average, thus secured, computation is made for the amount of compensation to be paid to the railroads for carrying the mail. It will be observed that the law directs the weighing during ninety successive working days. Why use the word "working?" Plainly to distinguish it from a day not a working day, What is that day? It would seem to me that anyone must answer "Sunday." The Department has construed Sunday as a rest day and have omitted it from the weighing period. The time required to secure ninety working days, if Sunday is not counted, will be one hundred and five days, but since there have been only ninety days on which mail has been weighed to obtain the correct daily weight under the law, the divisor must be ninety, the number of working days.

Confusion has arisen, however, over the Sunday mails and their relation to the weighing period. At the time the law was enacted there were but few, if any, Sunday trains, so that it is probable that the word "working" was used intentionally, and because of the fact that no mails were carried on that day. At the present time many railroads carry mail on Sunday, while others do not. How shall those roads be treated, and their compensation ascertained, which accommodate the public by carrying mail on Sunday? If the mail carried on that day is not weighed, then the road that has no Sunday train will secure the advantage and receive the greater compensation, because its mails are accumulated on Sunday and will be included in Monday's mail and weighed as a part of it. No one, of course, would contend that the road which gave the Sunday service should be punished by the Government by reduced compensation for so doing. It is probable that this difficulty was not contemplated when the law was enacted. But the condition has to be met in the construction of existing law. mails have been weighed on Sunday, which were carried on Sunday, but such weighings have been counted in and made a part of Monday's mail, just as it is added by accumulation when there is no Sunday train. Under the present interpretation the mails accumulating on Sunday and the mails carried on Sunday are both included in Monday's weighing. No fairer disposition of it could be made under existing law, and it seems to me no more reasonable interpretation of the existing statute could have been given.

By the pending bill it is proposed to omit the word "working" from the present law and to require mail to be weighed for one hundred and five successive days. If this provision should become a law, then the mails will be weighed each day without reference to whether that day is a working day, and the divisor will be 105, where heretofore it has been only 90, and, as anyone can see, will very seriously diminish what purports to be the daily average and will furnish what is, in fact, a correct daily average:

It is now provided that the mails shall be weighed once in every four years, and that weighing secures a daily average which serves as a basis of pay from the 1st day of July thereafter for four successive years. In order to be fair and obtain a correct basis for mail pay there should be an estimate of weight for each successive year and a provision made for that estimate to become a basis of weight for the succeeding year. The mails are enlarging in bulk rapidly, and the weights are so greatly increasing, that it is apparent that in the second, third, and fourth years, under the present system, there will be a large amount of mail for which the railroad companies will receive no compensation, if the law is changed so as to leave out the word " work-There is no provision in the proposed change in the law for payment to the railroads for the increased weight of mail during the latter part of the quadrennial period, although they are required to carry the increased mail.

The second-class mails are weighed each year. We can easily, therefore, determine the extent of increase of that class of mail. I submit herewith a statement of these weighings and their percentage of increase commencing with the year 1900:

Year.	Weight of mail.	Per cent of increase from 1903.
1900	Pounds. 382, 538, 999 429, 444, 573 454, 152, 359 509, 537, 962 569, 719, 819 618, 664, 754 660, 638, 840	12 21 31

From this table it may be seen that if the weight of secondclass mails for the year 1903 were taken as the basis of weight and if all other mail increased in the same proportion from time to time, then there should be added 12 per cent to that weight to time, then there should be added 12 per cent to that weight to secure the basis of pay for 1904, 21 per cent to secure the basis of pay for 1905, and 31 per cent to the weight to secure the basis for 1906. In other words, on this computation on actual weights the railroads carry, without compensation, a very large per cent in the three last years of the quadrennial

Another computation may be made which will throw some light on the proposition by showing what is the increase in the gross revenues for the same period. This is as follows:

Year.	Revenue.	Per cent of increase from 1903.
1903 1904 1905 1906	$134, 224, 443 143, 582, 624 152, 826, 585 167, 932, 782	7 13 25

This table is not given for the purpose of showing that the railroads actually carried 25 per cent more mail in 1906 than in 1903, but this rapid increase in postal receipts was brought about by the handling of largely increased amounts of mail, and it may be therefore naturally inferred as a reasonable deduction that the mails were 25 per cent greater in weight in 1906 than they were in 1903.

A careful investigation of the reports of the Post-Office Department showing the average daily weight of mail on the various railroad routes i nthe United States at the last weighing period, and the one for four years preceding it, fully bear out the statement that the weight of mail has increased more than 25 per cent between these weighing periods. If the law were changed so as to omit the word "working," then the railroad companies would receive no compensation for carrying this 25 per cent increase. I call attention at this time to the average daily weight of mail on various roads at the several weighing periods, with the increased per cent during the period:

These conditions as shown on these several important railroads show an increase in the quadrennial period of more than 30 per cent. If the proposed change in the law, omitting the word "working," is insisted upon I shall offer at the proper time, if I am permitted, an amendment which, in my judgment, will about correct this error in weight, and will have the effect of paying the railroads for all the mail they carry and will insure to the Government no greater outlay than is necessary to pay for the actual mail carried. It is as follows:

Provided further, That the average dally weight of mail secured by law for the purpose of determining the compensation to the railroads for each four-year period beginning with the 1st day of July thereafter shall serve as the basis of compensation for only one year thereafter; that at the end of said year there shall be added 8 per cent to the daily weight of the mail to serve as the basis of compensation for the second year of said four-year period; that at the end of the second year there shall be added 16 per cent to the daily average weight of the mail as originally ascertained to serve as the basis of compensation for the third year of said four-year period; that at the end of the third year of said four-year period; that at the end of the third year of said four-year period; that at the end of the third year of said four-year period; that at the end of the third year of said four-year period; that at the end of the third year of said four-year period.

The percentage of increase suggested by this proposed amond-

The percentage of increase suggested by this proposed amendment is slightly less than the actual percentage of increase in second-class mail matter. It is about proportionate to the increase in postal receipts, and is less than the actual percentage of increase shown between the last periods of weighing. Exact justice should be shown between all parties as nearly as possible. If we are to accept the weight of mail as a correct basis of pay, then the railroads should receive compensation for every pound of mail matter carried, but should not be paid for that which is not carried. If the daily average is made on successive days-as, in my judgment it should be-then the existing law should be so changed as to secure to the railroads each year compensation for all the mail carried by them, and the suggested amendment of increase for each succeeding year of the quadrennial period fully accomplishes it and should be incorporated in the law.

It will be observed, however, that if the word "working" is omitted and the amendment made which I suggest, it will but slightly affect the existing result. In other words, the present law, with the interpretation given it by the Department, se-cures a very nearly correct basis, if weight of mail is to be the determining factor.

The four gentlemen of the Post-Office Committee who sign the minority report give a hypothetical case to illustrate the injustice of the change by leaving out the word "working," as follows:

365 tons, 730,000 pounds  $\div$  313 = 2,332 pounds per day for... \$132.52 305 tons, 730,000 pounds  $\div$  365 = 2,000 pounds per day for... 128.30 The road performing the Sunday service receives \$4.22 per mile less than the road resting on Sunday. This is erroneous. If the word "working" is omitted from the law, then, whether the mail is carried one day, three days, six days, or seven days, the divisor is the same, "seven." divide the weight of the week by the number of days in the week to find the average daily weight for the week. the mail has been carried seven days the railroad is entitled to full pay. If it has carried it only six days, it is entitled to six-sevenths of a week's pay. If it has carried mail three days, three-sevenths, and if only one day, then it is entitled to one-seventh as much pay as if it had carried it every day in the

Now take the above illustration and correct it:

365 tons, 365 days, 2,000 pounds per day, for	$128, 20
365 tons carried in 313 days, or six times per week, for	109.89
365 tons carried in 156 days, or three times per week, for	54. 94
365 tons carried in 52 days, or one time per week, for	18. 31

By this system if a railroad carries mail on Sunday it gets the same compensation for that day as for carrying the mail on any other day, but the road that does not carry on Sunday loses the benefit from Sunday's accumulation of mail,

If I had time I would be pleased to go into detail and explain more at length the system of weighing and make further illustrations which would make plain the present system and the remedy that might properly be applied. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifty minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say at the outset that when I come to the question of the divisor I should be glad to have any gentleman ask me any question pertinent to the subject, and will yield if I can get time to answer.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the House and the country upon the presentation of a post-office appropriation bill which, although not free from defect, is, in my humble opinion, the most meritorious and fairest appropriation bill ever presented to Congress. The merit of this bill does not consist entirely in what it contains. Its merit consists to a very large degree also in what it omits, for I call the attention of the House and the committee to the fact that this bill omits the hoary-headed special-facilities subsidy iniquity that was with us for lo, so many years and which had such a narrow escape at the last session of Congress when the appropriation bill was up that a Member had to be voted who was a thousand miles away from the Capitol, and I think that had a recapitulation of the vote been properly asked for the provision would then have been defeated.

But evidently the subsidy got such a scare then that it has not dared to appear again. I say, therefore, that it is a great merit in this bill that so far as railway mail pay is concerned every railroad company in the United States, when this bill becomes a law, will stand upon the same footing and will be regulated by the same rule of compensation. There will be no stepchildren, no favorites, but all railway companies carrying the mail will be put upon the same basis and be paid according to the same rule. The greatest objection to that item in former bills was that there was an inequality of compensation.

This appropriation bill has two important features. One provides for an increase in the expenditures of the postal revenue and the other for a decrease in the expenditures of postal revenue. Both of these features of the bill are meritorious. The provisions relative to increased expenditure are those relating to the salaries of clerks in first and second class postoffices in the country, railway mail clerks, and city mail carriers and rural carriers. The increase in the compensation of these servants is, in the opinion of all of the members of the committee, just, and in most instances absolutely necessary. The increase in the compensation of rural carriers is absolutely The increase in the compensation of rural carriers is absolutely necessary in order that the efficiency of the service may be maintained. The work of the rural carriers, especially in the northern part of the United States, where in winter the weather is cold and the snow is deep, is very difficult and onerous, and the compensation under the present law is insufficient, so insufficient that there has been great difficulty in maintaining the service. That is generally the best criterion as to the sufficiency of compensation. I will insert in my remarks the following extract from the Department report upon the subject:

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, the tenth year in which rural delivery has been in operation, there has been material decrease in the demand for the service. The climax in the development of the rural delivery of mail was reached in the fiscal year 1904, when the service was installed on 9,447 routes. At that time the average number of petitions filed per month was 700. This average was maintained during the fiscal year 1905, but during the past fiscal year the number of petitions filed was 4.087, a monthly average of 390. Of this number, 3,700 were accepted for investigation.

The growth of the rural service during the ten years of its existence is shown by the following table:

Fiscal year.	Carriers.	Appropria- tions.	Expendi- tures.
1897. 1898. 1899. 1900. 1901. 1902. 1902. 1904. 1904.	83	$40,000	$14, 840
	148	50,250	50, 241
	391	150,032	150, 012
	1,276	450,000	420, 433
	4,301	1,750,796	1, 750, 321
	8,466	4,089,075	4, 089, 041
	15,119	8,580,364	8, 051, 549
	24,566	12,926,905	12, 645, 275
	32,055	21,116,600	20, 864, 885
	35,666	25,828,300	24, 785, 256

With the close of the fiscal year 1906 rural delivery was in operation on 35,766 routes. On 233 of these routes service is performed tri-weekly. On nearly all of the remainder the service is daily, as it is contrary to the policy of the Department to establish rural-delivery service more frequent than once a day. During the year 3,732 new routes were established, and 76 routes were discontinued, the net increase for the year in the number of routes in operation being 3,656. The decrease in the number of routes established is due to the falling off in the demand for the service. The number of petitions pending June 30, 1906, was 3,099. Since that date 449 petitions pending June 30, 1906, was 3,099. Since that date 449 petitions have been accepted and 752 routes established or ordered established. There are on hand awaiting action 825 petitions favorably reported, making the net number of petitions pending October 1, 1906, 1,968.

The appropriations for this item increased from $21,116,000 in 1905, $25,828,300 in 1906, to $32,987,400 in the present bill, this great increase being due largely to the general increase in the compensation of the carriers. But great as is the expenditure for this service it is certain that it also results in increased revenue.

The total receipts for 1906 were $157,932,782.95, an increase over 1905 of $15,106,197.85, which is the greatest increase for any year in the history of the service. The per cent of increase for any year in the history of the service. The per cent of increase in receipts is 9.88, as compared with 6.42 for 1905. For the third quarter the receipts exceeded the expenditures by $286,724.46.

The total expenditures during 1906 were $178,449,778.89, an increase of $11,050,609.66 over 1905. The per cent of increase, 6.60, is less than for a number of years and is smaller by one-third than the per cent of increase during 1905.

It is an interesting fact, as showing the relation between postal receipts and expenditures, that for several years past the receipts of one year have about equaled the expenditures of the year before.

These records show that last year 12 per cent, or approximately one-eighth of the rural carriers, resigned, and 21 per cent of the city carriers resigned, showing that there was not so great a difficulty in maintaining the service of carriers in the cities as in the rural districts.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, did the committee inquire into the question as to whether or not the rural feature of the Post-Office Department was anything like selfsustaining at this time, or what deficit there is in that service?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think that the committee considered that. I might say that I have given that subject some thought, and the report of the Postmaster-General above referred to shows that there has been an unprecedented increase in postal revenues of late years, and concurrently an unprecedented increase in the rural service, and the Postmaster-General in his report further says that there can be no question but that the rural service has increased the amount of first-class matter, the only matter upon which there is any profit to the Depart-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That has been my contention as a layman.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman from Kansas was right,

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And I should have been glad to see the committee report $900 instead of $840 for the rural

Mr. STEENERSON. There was not a member of the committee who did not desire to make it $900, but considering all the demands for salary increases, a compromise was agreed to at $840. I believe that in the near future it will be necessary to place it at the figure which the gentleman has named.

Now, I believe this is a pretty good index to the necessity for salary increase. I think this affords a valuable suggestion to my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. Davis] in searching for arguments in support of his bill for the increase of the salaries of the clerks in Washington. Perhaps upon investigating the statistics, which I have never done, he might find what the percentage of resignations had been here in the last year, and if it were very great, and if there were danger that the wheels of the Government would stop if we did not increase the salaries of the clerks in Washington, it would afford a splendid argument in support of his bill. [Laughter.] Now I come to the question of the provisions of the bill which, if enacted into law, will result in a decrease in the expenditures of postal revenues. the provisions that relate to railway mail pay. The reduction on postal-car pay—on the 40-foot cars from $30 to $27.50, on the 50-foot cars from $40 to $32.50, on the 60-foot cars from $50 to $40-has been estimated to amount in round numbers to a million dollars.

There is in the bill, as drawn in the committee, provision for other decreases or diminution of railway mail pay. The first is a 5 per cent reduction upon those roads that carry an average daily weight in excess of 5,000 pounds; next, 10 per cent reduction upon those roads that carry an average daily weight in excess of 48,000 pounds, and then fixing a flat rate of $19 per ton per mile per annum for the quantity above that amount.

Then, there was incorporated into the bill the famous proposition which, for convenience, I think I might denominate the "Murdock proposition," in honor of the gentleman from Kansas. That is a provision to change the method of determining the average daily weight under the statute of 1873 by changing the divisor from thirty to thirty-five or, as the period has been lengthened, from ninety to one hundred and five, there being fifteen weeks of six working days each in ninety days, and nreen Sundays being added makes one hundred and five. In other words, we might weigh for the whole year, and if we weighed for the whole year, the working days, we would have three hundred and thirteen, and if you counted Sundays it would be three hundred and sixty-five.

On December 11 the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] made his speech in this House. It was more than two months before the Post-Office Committee reported this bill. three weeks before it began the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. He printed his speech in the RECORD, and in that he contended that he had made a most astonishing dis-covery—that by means of a false construction, as he termed it, an unwarranted construction of the law of 1873, the Department had been giving the railroads an advantage, which he explained amounted to millions and which, as a matter of fact, does amount, according to the computation of the Department subsequently made, to $5,000,000 and over and which I submit amounts exactly to one-seventh of the total amount.

Now, if that was a discovery of a fact, it was an important discovery, but unfortunately—or I might say fortunately—the gentleman was mistaken. Now I want to say a few words about this at this time because of the reflection that it necessarily easts upon this Administration and prior Administrations of looting the Treasury, as the gentleman said, of $40,000,000 or, as he amended it day before yesterday, $60,000,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentle-man if I ever used the word "loot?"

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, I will take that back. The gentleman said by false or by unwarranted construction—by illegal construction—the Department had allowed the railroads wrongfully take the funds of the Government Treasury.

Now, I do not wonder at the gentleman making that discovery, or thinking he had made a discovery, because I know the gentleman's zeal for the public welfare, and I know how he is trying during his services in Congress to render valuable service to the people, and especially to the Post-Office Committee. But I want you also, in considering the amount of weight to be given to the legal opinion of the gentleman, to remember that possibly he may have unconsciously been biased. man is not of the legal profession, but a journalist, engaged in publishing a newspaper, and I want to recall the fact that since the Second Assistant Postmaster-General started the agitation for the increase of postage on second-class matter all the newspapers in the country have retorted that we are not charging too low a rate for second-class matter when we charge a cent a pound, but you, Congress, are paying too much to the railroads, and, secondly, throughout the whole length and breadth of the land there has been an outcry that railways have been paid entirely too much, that the way to reduce the deficit or wipe it out of the postal revenues is to decrease the railway mail pay. I believe in being perfectly fair to the railroads, and believe in paying them fairly for the service they perform in transporting the mails.

I am one of those who believe that the railway mail pay on certain routes, as I said yesterday, is excessive; but I do not believe that railway mail pay on all routes is excessive, and I had occasion to explain that last April when we were considering the last appropriation bill. I pointed out then that the present pay of the light routes, carrying 5,000 pounds or less and who furnish a compartment in a car and carry a messenger without charge, can not be called excessive.

further pointed out that under the law of 1873 the so-called "sliding scale" of reduction of pay as density of traffic increases exhausts itself at 5,000 pounds. The law was framed on the principle that increase of traffic enabled economies to be effected. That is an economic law, especially applicable to transportation, the law of "increasing returns," so called. But as Professor Adams, in his celebrated report to the Wolcott Commission, said, this law of 1873 exhausts its sliding scale of lowering charges too soon.

At 5,000 pounds the per ton mile rate is 18.7 cents, and the weight over 5,000 goes at the flat rate of 5.8 cents mile. The rate continues the same above that weight, however great the weight daily. Average freight rates are 0.72 cent per ton per mile. The lowest possible rate for mail, even if it moves in hundreds of thousands of tons daily is eight times the average charge for freight. I will show later on that on the very heavy routes running out of New York they carry second-class matter packed solid in storage cars up to 47,000 pounds, so that there is great economy in the transportation. But I will go back to the Murdock proposition. I submit that it simply involves whether the Department's construction of the law was correct or not. Did the Department in adopting the divisor that they did adopt interpret the law correctly? Did they carry out the intention of Congress as expressed in the act. It is a question of legal hermeneutics, of the construction of a statute, and in order to judge whether or not the Department has put a proper construction upon it, whether or not they have given effect to the intent of Congress we must observe the ordinary rules of statutory construction familiar to the law. One would suppose it a question for lawyers to settle.

I was very much gratified at the conclusion my friend from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] came to a few moments ago when he said the Department's interpretation of the law was correct. I was glad to hear he finally came to that result, because I reached that result some time ago myself, but I do not agree with him in the history of this law, and I think a reference to its history will help us to solve this question of statutory construction if we desire to solve it. The gentleman from Kansas made his charge on December 11, and January 5 the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads wrote a letter to the Postmaster-General asking him to explain the rules and methods under which they determine the average daily weight of mail upon the railroads, and received answer as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1907.

Washington, D. C., January 9, 1907.

Sin: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 5th instant, reading as follows:

"Will you please advise me of the general practice followed by the Post-Office Department in determining the weight of mails at the various weighing periods under the law, and the method of computations by which the rate for such payment is ascertained?"

In reply I submit the inclosed statement from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who is charged with immediate supervision of the transportation of the mails, including the direction of the weighing of the mails and the adjustment of compensation thereon.

In transmitting this information I desire to say that some time ago I directed an investigation of this feature of the Department's work, among a number of other matters concerning which I desired to be advised, and it has been my intention, upon receipt of the necessary data, to request an opinion from the Assistant Attorney-General for this Department and, if thought advisable, from the Attorney-General of the United States.

Department and, if thought advisable, from the Attorney-General of the United States.

A question may be asked as to what the difference in compensation to railroad companies would be if the average daily weight were ascertained by using as a divisor the actual number of days, including Sundays. In the weighing period instead of the number of week days, excluding Sundays. In view of the recent discussion in the House on this subject, I some days ago directed that calculations be made as to 100 representative railroad routes covering all sections of the country to show what the compensation would be if the actual number of days, including Sundays, in the weighing period were used as a divisor, and an estimate as to the decrease in compensation for all railroad service on a pro rata basis of the results actually ascertained in the 100 typical routes. I inclose herewith a table showing the result of those calculations. lations.

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU, Postmaster-General.

Hon. Jesse Overstreet, Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives.

The statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General was as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, January 9, 1907.

The Postmaster-General.

The Postmaster-General.

Sir: Referring to the letter of the 5th instant from the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives, asking that he be advised "of the general practice followed by the Post-Office Department and determining the weight of the mails at the various weighing periods under the law, and the method of computations by which the rate for such payment is ascertained," the following is submitted:

By section 4002, Revised Statutes (Postal Laws and Regulations, sec. 1164), the Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to adjust compensation for railroad mail transportation at certain rates herein, specified, upon the average daily weight of mail carried, "the average weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct."

By the act of March 3, 1875 (Postal Laws and Regulations, sec. 1164, par. 4), the Postmaster-General "is hereby directed to have the mails weighed, as often as now provided by law, by the employees of the Post-Office Department, and have the weights stated and verified to him by said employees under such instruction as he may consider just to the Post-Office Department and the railroad companies."

The appropriation act approved March 3, 1905, provided for a longer period of weighing, in the following language:

"That hereafter before making a readjustment of pay for transportation of mails on railroad routes the average weight shall be ascertained by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than ninety, at such times after June 30, 1905, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct."

By section 18, Pos

whose names appear on the eligibles for appointment as substitute railway mail clerks.

These welghers are placed in the mail cars and railroad stations and are furnished with cards upon which are to be entered the weights of mails taken on and put off the trains at each station. The weighers in the cars take these weights under the supervision of the head clerk. The cards are forwarded daily to the chief clerk in charge of the lines, by whom they are sent to the division superintendent railway mail service, and in his office a corps of clerks consolidate the weights shown by the cards for the several trains and the several days in the weighing period so as to show the total weight put on and the total weight put off all the trains at each station for each day of the entire weighing period. These consolidated weights are entered upon what is known as the "weight" circular, one for each route, and the weight circulars are forwarded to the division of railway adjustments, Post-Office Department. There the weight circular is taken, together with the distance circular showing the distances between the several stations of each route, and calculations are made to determine the average weight carried over the entire route. Then to determine the average weight carried over the entire route for the entire route the average weight carried over the entire route for the entire weighting period is divided by the number of "working days" (to use the language of the statute)—that is, the number of week days, excluding Sundays, during the weighting period.

divided by the number of "working days" (to use the language of the statute)—that is, the number of week days, excluding Sundays, during the weighing period.

The question as to whether the average daily weight contemplated by the statute is correctly ascertained by the present practice of dividing the total average weight carried over the entire route by the number of week days, excluding Sundays, within the weighing period, or whether the average daily weight would be more correctly determined by dividing the total average weight carried over the entire route by the total number of days, including Sundays, during the weighing period, has frequently been discussed and was recently referred to on the floor of the House. It has been contended by some that the average should in every case be obtained by using as a divisor the actual number of days in the weighing period. It can not be denied that this would produce an average daily weight for that period, but the question is whether this would produce the average intended by the statute, and in order to ascertain this not only the special language of the statute providing for an annual rate of pay based upon an average daily weight, to be ascertained by an actual weighing of the mails for a certain number of "successive working days," should be considered, but also the history of the manner of adjusting compensation for railroad service which preceded the act of 1873, the extent to which it was incorporated in the act of 1873, and the contemporaneous statements of l'ostmaster-General with reference thereto. When this is done it seems that no doubt can remain that Congress intended that not the whole number of days within the period of weighing should be used as a divisor, but the number of working days within such period. Such examination will show, I think, that under conditions where there are railroad mail routes upon which there is both week-day and Sunday service and week-day service alone, the specific language of the statute requiring a weighing to be had mails in order to arrive at a basis of classification for compensation for service the law of March 3, 1845, section 19, was in force, which provided that—

"To insure as far as may be practicable an equal and just rate of compensation, according to the service performed, and on the several rallroad companies in the United States for the transportation of the mail, it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to arrange and divide the railroad routes "* Into three classes, according to the size of the mails, the speed with which they are conveyed, and the importance of the service."

In order to more accurately determine the "size of the mails" so conveyed, the Post-Office Department issued in 1867 to railroads a "railroad weight circular," requesting them to weigh the mails for "thirty consecutive working days" and report the results to the Department, together with description of accommodations furnished, etc. The majority of the railroads compiled with the request (Report of the Postmaster-General for 1867, pp. 10, 11). Computations of the average daily weight were made upon these returns (pp. 72 to 91, inclusive). An examination of the departmental records and reports shows that the instructions were to weigh for "thirty consecutive working days," and that in computing the average daily weight thirty was used as a divisor; therefore, the weights were taken for every day of the period measured by the "thirty consecutive working days," and that in computing the average daily weight thirty was used as for the first readjustment by classes, determined by the average daily weight, under the law of 1845. The Postmaster-General, in his report for 1868 (p. 10), says:

"The 30th of June, 1868, being the period for the expiration of the first readjustment of the case of pay on railroad routes in those States, based upon returns of the weights of the mails conveyed and the accommodations provided for mails and agents of the Department, received in response to the 'railroad-weight circular' referred to in the last an master-General, 1874, p. 8). The returns were received, and the computations and readjustments were made under the provisions of the law (pp. 108 to 183, inclusive).

In making these computations and adjustments the divisor used was the same as that which had theretofore been used, namely, thirty days. The reports and records for the succeeding years show the same character of weighing and the same manner of computation and adjustment. It is apparent from these facts that the same system of weighing the mails and of computing the average daily weight upon the returns for a certain number of "consecutive working days," which had obtained in the Department for years before the passage of the law of 1873, was practically adopted by that law and continued without change in the administration of the same. For this we have not only the logic of the facts, but the statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General for the year 1878, who states on page 61 of his report. In 1871 the service rendered by rullroad sort of 1873 was gauged by the system substitution of the page of the same state of the service rendered by rullroads for carrying mails was before Congress at two different times during this period, upon which occasions reductions in the rates were made. By the acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878, Congress reduced the rates provided for by the act of 1873 by a flat reduction of 10 per cent and 5 per cent, respectively. I think it must be assumed that such action could not be taken by Congress without thorough information upon the act of 1873 by the executive officers and the details of administration, yet the reduction effected was by a flat rate of deduction and not by any change in the law which would necessitate a different construction and practice with reference to the manner the computing the average weight, the correction of which would reduce the pay of railroads. This is also confirmed by reference to the annual report of Postmaster-General Batton, 1884. When some paying the paying the provision

"This Commission heid extended hearings for a period of several years and examined witnesses from all available sources, including expert statisticians, and submitted its report to Congress in 1901. Congress has taken no action on this report nor on the one preceding it."

Among these Postmaster-Generals were not only several eminent lawyers, such as Mr. Vilas and Mr. Bissell, but men eminent in business affairs and who gave special study to the question, and who concluded that the practice was not only justified by the law, but the only one that would be equitable and just under the circumstances. In September, 1884, Postmaster-General Gresham issued an order to become effective at the next weighing, as follows: "That hereafter when the weight of mail is taken on railroad routes performing service seven days per week the whole number of days the mails are weighed, whether thirty or thirty-flve, shall be used as a divisor for obtaining the average weight per day."

Postmaster-General Gresham retired from office soon thereafter. Postmaster-General Hatton succeeded him October 14, 1884. He submitted the order to the Attorney-General with a statement and illustration of the practice which had prevailed in tabulating weights from the time the law became effective. On October 31, 1884, the Acting Attorney-General rendered an opinion sustaining the practice of the Department, in which he said:

"I have considered your communication of the 22d instant, requesting to know whether the construction placed by the Post-Office Department on section 4002, subsection 2, prescribing the mode in which the average of the weight of mails transported on railroad routes shall be ascertained, is correct, and am of the opinion that that construction is correct, and that a departure from it would defeat the intention of the law and cause no little embarrassment."

The opinion was published by the Postmaster-General, who revoked the order of Postmaster-General Gresham, above referred to, and the practice has continued since as therefor portion thus being in favor of the company with the least claim for consideration. This can not be the design of the statute."

At all times since the passage of the act of 1873 there have been routes of both kinds, though the proportion upon which daily, including Sunday, service is maintained has increased. The reports and records show that at the time of the first weighing, in 1867, and at the times of the several weighings since, including the weighing upon which the first readjustment under the law of 1873 was made, there were a number of routes upon which only week-day service was rendered. At present in the State of Pennsylvania there are 56 routes upon which malls are carried every day in the year, more or less Sunday service being performed on such routes. In the same State there are 190 routes upon which malls are carried only six days out of seven, the malls originating and accumulating between 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Satunday night being weighed and tabulated with the mails carried on Monday. In the State of New York 78 routes have Sunday service, and 81 routes six days a week service. In the States comprising the Middle West, the section of the country in which malls will be weighed within the next few months, there are 374 routes which had Sunday service—in other words, which relied upon six days a week service as fulfilling proper conditions justifying the legal rate of pay.

In the practice of the Department, railroads which do not carry mails on Sunday are held to be entitled, under the decision of the Attorney-General and the long-prevailing practice, to have all mail matter originating and accumulating during Sunday added to the Monday tabulation of weights, for the reason that weighing of the mails must be constructively on working days, and therefore mails carried on Sunday are mails which otherwise would be carried on Monday and which, if railroads did carry on Monday, they would receive pro rata compensation for. If any other practice were adopted with reference to this s

OCTOBER 24, 1884.

Sir: The act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. L., p. 558), regulating the pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes provides:

"That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely:

"On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175, etc.

"The average weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty " " "

Upon a large number of the railroad routes mails are carried on six days each week—that is, no mail is carried on Sunday. On others they are carried on every day in the year.

It has been the practice since 1873 in arriving at the average weight of mails per day on these two classes of service to treat the "successive working days" as being composed of the six secular or working days in the week, which is explained by the following lilustrations:

Two routes, No. 1 and No. 2, over each of which 313 tons of mails are carried annually.

On route No. 1 mails are carried twice daily, except Sunday, six days per week, and are weighed for thirty successive working days, covering usually a period of thirty-five days. The result is divided by, thirty and an average weight of mails per day of 2,000 pounds is obtained.

Transportation per mile of road per annum miles 1,252

Transportation per mile of road per annum miles 1, 252
Weight per mile of road per annum tons 313
Pay per ton per mile of road per annum cents 47, 92
Pay per mile run of road per annum do 11, 9
Rate of pay allowable per mile per annum $150

On route No. 2 mails are carried twice daily, seven days per week, and are weighed for thirty successive working days, and for the intervening Sundays, the weight on the Sundays being treated as if carried on Mondays, the weighing, as before, covering usually a period of thirty-five days. The result is divided by thirty and an average weight of mails per day of 2,000 pounds is obtained.

Transportation per mile of road per annum miles 1, 460
Weight per mile of road per annum tons 313
Pay per ton per mile of road per annum cents 47, 92
Pay per mile run of road per annum do 10, 2
Rate of pay allowed per mile per annum $150

I have thought it necessary to give the foregoing illustrations in order that the practice of this Department under the law cited may readily appear, and I will thank you to advise me whether that practice is in compliance with or in violation of the statute.

If not in conformity with the law will you please indicate the correct method by which the average weight per day should be obtained and the compensation adjusted thereon?

Yery respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,

FRANK HATTON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. B. H. Brewster, Attorney-General, Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, October 31, 1884.

The Postmaster-General.

Sir: I have considered your communication of the 22d instant, requesting to know whether the construction placed by the Post-Office Department on section 4002, subsection 2, prescribing the mode in which the average of the weight of mails transported on railroad routes shall be ascertained is correct, and am of opinion that that construction is correct, and that a departure from it would defeat the intention of the law and cause no little embarrassment.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

WM. A. MAURY,

Acting Attorney-General.

The charge was so serious that the Postmaster-General properly said that he had been considering the propriety of submitting the question to the Attorney-General. The letter gives the history, the origin, of this act of Congress and points out that the first statute upon the subject of railway mail pay was in 1845; that in 1869 in order to carry out that statute the Department ordered a weighing. were required to determine the size of the mail; so in order to determine that they determined to have a weighing and issued a weighing circular. There was no provision in the statute of 1845 requiring a weighing, but simply to determine the quantity, and the Department, without any specific direction in that statute, ordered a weighing in order to determine the quantity. They weighed under directions, which will be found in the Department, for a period of thirty days. The_instructions were that they should weigh for a period of thirty work-The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] is mistaken when he says there were not Sunday routes in those days. The record shows there were both of those routes; in fact, three kinds of routes—daily and Sunday and triweekly. Under the weighing circular they weighed the mail on the six-day route six days, of course. They weighed the mail on the seven-day route seven days and counted the Sunday weight as of Monday. Will the gentleman yield for a moment Mr. MURDOCK.

there?

Mr. STEENERSON. I prefer to wait until I have finished. Mr. MURDOCK. Can you give some documentary evidence on the second proposition?

Mr. STEENERSON. If I am mistaken I shall be very glad to retract it. I think you can find it in the Postmaster-General's letter. Now, then, they computed the thirty-day period as including thirty working days, and they took the weight on the five Sundays and added it to the five Mondays in the period. That was the only way by which a just and accurate determination of the total amount of mail transported on each road could be determined, because it must necessarily be determined according to the pound per mile basis. It is, and was then, before the statute of 1873, a per ton per mile rate, weight multiplied by distance. Now, then, after that had been the practice of the Department for seven years Congress enacted the law of 1873 and used the same words, "working days," in the statute that were to be found in the weight circular of 1867. It is one of the elementary principles of statutory construction that the circumstances surrounding the enactment of a law must be taken into account in construing it. So if you copy or adopt a statute from another State that has had a peculiar construction put upon by the courts of that State, you adopt not only the words of the statute, but the construction there given to it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. May I ask a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Without reference to the law, why would it not have been just as fair to have added Saturday and Sunday to the other five days and then divided it by five?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will explain that to the gentleman, or, at least, I hope to. I will come to that right away.

Now, there is a most remarkable difference of opinion on this subject among the members of the committee. There are three The chairman [Mr. Overstreet of Indiana] signs one, and he, in my opinion, is mistaken as to the effect of this proposed provision in the bill, for he says:

In computing the average weight of mail carried per day, the whole number of days such mail may be weighed shall be used as a divisor.

That is not the effect of the provision in the bill. The effect of the provision is to adopt as a divisor the total number of days in the weighing period-that is, including workdays and Sundays. It is a single divisor for all classes of routes. do not use the number represented by the days upon which mail is weighed . There is where the gentleman from Kansas seems-I do not say that he is, but seems-to be in error, as well as many other gentlemen, for they will say if you adopt a "false" divisor, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] says, then it is wrong. If you adopt a divisor for each class of route, using only the number of days mail is carried on, you have a different basis for each. This fixes a per ton per mile compensation for transportation of the mail. Given the length of route and weight carried in the whole period of a year, you divide the total by the whole number of working days. Instead of ninety days, take a year. What divisor would you use if you set aside no weighing period? Weighed every day in the year, except on six and three day a week routes, you would weigh three hundred and thirteen and one hundred and fifty-seven. If you are only compelled to carry mail on working days, clearly the divisor should be three hundred and thirteen.

Mr. GOEBEL. But the statute says you must fix the compen-

Mr. STEENERSON. I will come to the gentleman after while. The gentleman has a minority report here.

If you adopt the construction placed upon it by the report of the chairman of the committee [Mr. OVERSTREET] and that placed upon it by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goebel] and say you must use as a divisor the days only upon which the mail is weighed, you will adopt three divisors—three hundred and sixty-five for the seven-day route, three hundred and thirteen for the six-day route, and you will adopt one hundred and fifty-seven for the The result will be, of course, that when you decrease the divisor you will increase the rate per ton-mile. You will give the triweekly route twice as much weight per mile as you give the six-day-a-week route, and you will give the sixday-a-week route one-seventh more than you do the seven-day-aweek route, causing a loss in ton mileage, which results in dividing with the highest divisor. Now, the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] and his followers on this man from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] and his followers on this remind me very much of a farmers' convention in my State many years ago when the millers used to take toll from the grist. They took one-eighth of the quantity. The farmers thought it was an extortion, and they held a convention and resolved to seek a remedy in law. One gentleman, who was considerable of a demagogue, thinking he could curry favor, introduced a resolution to the effect that a law should be passed prohibiting any higher toll than one-fourth; but the farmers could not follow that kind of reasoning, and they voted it down quickly.

But if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] had been there, it seems to me that he would have argued that it was better for the farmer to have a small divisor than a big one. and, therefore, that you decreased the toll by decreasing the divisor. Now, what can you do? You have three kinds of routes. You can not take three divisors, because it would result in absurdity, paying a higher rate per ton per mile where you carry the mail with less dispatch.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are there not 756 different routes, carrying less than 5,000 pounds, that would not be affected by any divisor at all?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; you must have a divisor to get a daily average, but you need not have a weighing period, for you can weigh the whole year. When the price fixed, as I said, is per ton per mile allowed for the transportation of mails under the law, it gives the Department the right to determine the frequency and the speed with which it is to be transported. We have three kinds of routes: Three days a week, six days a week, and seven days a week; and unless you use the same divisor for all of them you will have a higher rate per ton per mile for the fewer dispatches of mail.

Now, a great many have understood, again, that the suggested new proposition would result in paying less for the Sunday service-the seven-day-a-week service-than you pay for the six-As a matter of fact, if you use the same day-a-week service. divisor-if you divide the total weight of mail passing over the road by the total number of working days in the week, month, quarter, or year, or whether you raise the divisor or lower itif you use the same divisor for all three classes of routes, the result is the same per ton per mile compensation on each class. Each class of route should have the same rate for same amount of transportation. That is what the Legislature had in mind when they enacted this law. That is what the Department had in mind when they interpreted it. from Kansas is not now sticking to the original proposition that he made, that you should have a divisor representing the same number as the number of days upon which the mail is weighed—one divisor for the seven-day-a-week route and another for the six. You have got to have a fictitious divisor as to one or the other, unless you use more than one. So that there is no difference in the pay on six or seven day route for same total weight under the present proposition. The only dif-ference as I understand it is that by using the higher divisor you reduce the daily average one-seventh. That is the only result; and you pay the same price per ton per mile to both roads. It is true that the Sunday route gives one more dispatch of mail.

Now, I illustrate that this way: I can say if, for instance, a rural service has daily service, that if we pay the rural carrier $1 per pound on the average weight of mail and his route is 25 miles, if he carried 10 pounds, he would get $250 per annum; if it was 20 pounds, he would get $500 per annum, and if it was 30 pounds, he would get $750 per annum. But if one rural carrier should say, "Here, I have friends on this route; they are willing to feed my horse on Sundays, perhaps the whole week. if I will give them an extra carriage, and I will carry the mail on Sunday," and he carries one-seventh of the mail on Sunday, thereby reducing the average load which he would have to carry on the six days. Now, we will have two carriers who will have transported over the same distance the same quantity of mail, but if you use 7 for the divisor, the man who gives one extra expedition of the mail a week will be paid one-seventh less. The only extra service of the seven-day-a-week service is that they get the same quantity of mail in the seven days that they otherwise get in six, and the pay being per ton per mile a day, it ought to be the same, because the statute simply says there shall be daily mail.

So that where the Post-Office Department requires two deliveries of mail, or even three, there being bigger train mileage, the total weight remaining the same, you do not divide by the double divisor, but give the average rates of pay to that road with the road that has just one train a day. On some routes the Post-Office Department requires dispatch of the mail more frequently than twice. There are some routes where the dispatches are every two hours or every three hours, but that neither increases nor diminishes the pay.

When the mail, therefore, in contemplation of this statute, is carried on the working days in the week, or in the month, or in the year, there is a daily mail within the contemplation of this statute, the true division is 313, and you must use that whether you carry the mail 157 times a year or whether you carry it 365 times a year or 313 times a year.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Nine minutes. .
Mr. STEENERSON. I am afraid I can not yield to the gen-

Mr. MURDOCK. Just a minute. It is vital to a proper un derstanding of this.

Mr. STEENERSON. Very well.

Mr. MURDOCK. If it is fair to put the Sunday weights into Mr. MURDOCK. If it is fair to put the Sunday weights into the Monday mail and divide by 6, then why is it not fair to put all the weights of the week into Saturday and divide by 1?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have shown the absurdity of that proposition by my story of the miller.

Mr. MURDOCK. I don't think you have.

Mr. STEENERSON. If you carried the mail once a year, and divided by 1, which would be no divisor at all, you would get 365 times the pay.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly; and you get one-seventh more pay the way you figure it. No; the total pay is the same for the same weight over the same length of route. If you don't want to carry mall Sunday you can leave it over to Monday and have just the same number of pounds.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to read from the report of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goebel] on this bill. Here is the minority report of the gentleman: Again, I do not think that the Department was justified in fixing the compensation on the hypothesis that it is a Sunday service or special in its character. It is said that this change involves a reduction of $5,000,000 during the next four years. If that be true, and the action of the Department could be justified upon the theory that it is a Sunday service, then it seems to me that the amount which the Government would have to pay is far in excess of the value of such service. If it can be shown that this service involves extraordinary expense or differs in other respects from the week-day service, then, clearly, additional compensation ought to be allowed to the railroads.

There never was any proposition to pay the seven-day service any more for the same amount of transportation than you pay the six-day route. The gentleman overlooks the fact that what you gained in weight of mail on Sunday you diminished in the other six. The pay is the same.

The gentleman claims that the seven-day routes now get more pay than the six-day routes, but that is an error. They get absolutely the same pay for carrying the same amount of mail over the same distance, and that disposes of the position of the gentleman.

I will now consider the general subject of the justice of reducing railway mail pay upon the dense routes. This subject was investigated for three years by the Wolcott Commission, which reported to Congress in 1901. Every expert on the subject of prominence in the United States was heard. The report is a divided one. There were eight members. Of these, four-Wolcott, Allison, Martin, and Loud-reported that railway mail pay was not excessive; two-Moody and Catchingsreported that on the evidence as to the size of the average load carried on a postal car they were in doubt; that the whole question, as explained by the Commission's expert, Mr. Adams, turned on the size of the load—that is, if the cars in a mail train on the dense routes could be loaded with 3½ tons, instead of 2, as testified to by some railroad witnesses, the cost of transportation would be reduced more than half. They wanted further evidence, and if that disclosed that the average load on postal car exceeded 2 tons then they would recommend a

The other two members-Chandler and Fleming-were satisfied from the evidence taken that railway mail pay on the dense routes was excessive and should be reduced.

Now, since that report we have additional evidence on this very point. In spite of the claim of the minority report, I submit there is evidence on this subject which ought to be con-The last Postal Commission took evidence as to the way in which second-class mail is handled in the mails. It was proven before them that it is packed in solid storage cars containing 22,000 pounds and more. That Commission in its report recommend unanimously in favor of reduction. I quote from page 32 of the report:

page 32 of the report:

We accordingly recommend the scheme of progressive reduction of compensation for mail carried in excess of 5,000 pounds per day which is embodied in the accompanying bill. The reduction begins with a weight in excess of 5,000 pounds. It leaves untouched the present rate of $171 for the daily average weight of 5,000 pounds for the reason that we do not believe that density of that degree only permits sufficient economies in the methods of transportation to justify a lower compensation. Where the daily weight, however, is in excess of 5,000 pounds, we think that the economies above mentioned are possible and can be increasingly utilized. The scheme of reduction which we recommend is therefore progressive, beginning with a 5 per cent reduction between 48,000 and 80,000 pounds, and thereafter at the reduced rate of $15 per ton per mile per annum carried instead of the present rate of $21.37.

In addition to this, I took pains to inquire at the hearings

In addition to this, I took pains to inquire at the hearings before the committee last year, and Second Assistant Postmaster-General Shallenberger promised to look the matter up from the way sheets, and in response to an inquiry sent a letter I printed in the Record last April, which I here reproduce:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, April 4, 1906,

Hon. Halvor Steenerson, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sir: Replying to your several inquiries in regard to the relative weight of mails carried in storage cars and distributing cars on exclusive mail trains, I regret that we can not give you just the information you call for, because in weighing mails we have never kept the weight carried in a storage car separate and apart from that carried in a distributing car on the same train, nor would it be practicable, as mail is being constantly shifted from one car to another in the process of distribution.

Taking all of the trains that carry storage cars as well as distribu-tribution.

Taking all of the trains that carry storage cars as well as distributing cars on what might be termed "exclusive mail trains"—although that term is to some extent a misnomer, because there are probably not more than two or three trains in the country that are made up exclusively of mail cars, there being usually one or more express or baggage cars, or possibly a passenger car or sleeper—we find that on such trains we have forty-eight distributing cars as against twenty-six storage cars. The weight of mail carried in storage cars, as well as in distributing cars, fluctuates very much. We recently had a report showing that 47,000 pounds was carried in a storage car, but the average weight will probably run from 20,000 to 30,000 pounds. The average amount carried in a distributing car will probably run from 5,000 to 8,000 pounds. S.000 pounds.

to 8,000 pounds.

On the transcontinental trains, as well as all other through trains, the mail in the storage car does not, as a rule, go through intact from one end to the other. It is usually distributed en route, the undistributed mail being taken from the storage car into the distributing car to be worked, its place in the storage car being taken by through mail that has already been distributed.

Very respectfully,

Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

W. S. SHALLENBERGER, Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

You will observe that he says that on routes that have special mail trains they had forty-eight distributing cars as against twenty-six storage cars, or approximately one-half storage cars. The storage cars have been loaded as high as 47,000 pounds, but the average would be from 20,000 to 30,000 pounds, and the average in a distributing car would run from 5,000 to 8,000 pounds—that is, from 2½ to 4 tons.

At the hearings before the Post-Office Committee this year I again examined Mr. Shallenberger on the same subject, and this will be found in the hearings, beginning with page 154 and continuing to page 160.

On page 155 is the following:

On page 155 is the following:

Mr. Shallenberger. We would find, I think, if we weighed, this result: In the cars leaving New York, filled with newspapers in sacks, probably a weight of 22,000 pounds; with magazines of heavy paper, packed solid and square in sacks and packed solid in the car, a result of perhaps 40,000.

Mr. Steenbergon. The result is according to the way it is packed, but the storage cars will carry 10 or 12 tons?

Mr. Shallenberger. Yes; as an average load.

Mr. Steenbergon. Or 22,000 pounds. And what is the average load of the railway post-office car that is used for distribution purposes?

Mr. Shallenberger. From 2½ to 4 tons.

Mr. Steenbergon. From 5,000 to 8,000 pounds?

Mr. Shallenberger. I should perhaps say from 2 to 4 tons.
Mr. Stafford. How much in a 50-foot car?
Mr. Shallenberger. I will ask Mr. Grant to answer that question.
Mr. Grant. It runs from 2 to 4 tons in the 40 to 60 foot cars. I do not think the 60-foot cars will average more perhaps than 3½ tons.
The weight of a 60-foot car is about 100,000 pounds.
Mr. Steenberson. And that carries about 8,000 pounds?
Mr. Steenberson. And that carries about 8,000 pounds?
Mr. Steenberson. Mr. Shallenberger, the fact that this mail can be carried in storage cars is a factor that would be an argument in favor of reduced railway mail pay for those routes, would it not?
Mr. Shallenberger. It would be an argument in favor of applying any reduction to those routes more largely than to the smaller routes.
Mr. Shallenberger. It would be an argument in favor of applying any reduction to those routes more largely than to the smaller routes.
Mr. Shallenberger. Very much less.
Mr. Shallenberger. Very much less.
Mr. Shallenberger. Very much less.
Canada has half a cent per pound rate for second-class matter. Peru has recently agreed, as I am advised, to carry second-class matter free. Inasmuch as we want to carry only legitimate second-class matter and rule out the illegitimate, let us not longer tempt the railroads to seek that class of storage-car matter in preference to other. Let us have reduction of expenditure when we fill a storage car, particularly with that class of mail matter. Let it be less remunerative to them than other matter carried in other cars, so that we will not be expecting to have them bid for it, as it were.
When we take into consideration that the storage cars will

When we take into consideration that the storage cars will average from 10 to 15 tons and sometimes carry as high as 47,000 pounds and that the lowest estimated average for the distributing cars is 3½ tons, it will be seen that the average load is largely increased. If we should have, for instance, in a train four distributing cars of 3½ tons each and two storage cars of 15 tons each, we would have an average of 71 tons of mail in each car, which, according to Mr. Adams's famous report, would justify a reduction in the railway mail pay on such trains of one-half or more.

Mr. Adams's report on this subject is as follows:

one-half or more.

Mr. Adams's report on this subject is as follows:

My judgment is that the application of the statute of 1873 to the present conditions under which mail is carried results in overpayment upon the dense routes.

This conclusion is reached by a comparison of mail compensation upon any route exceeding 150 or 200 miles with railway compensation for carrying express matter or first-class freight.

In this comparison the railway has been allowed 50 per cent of the total charge for express, instead of 40 per cent, which is the contract rate. It is further shown in the report that the Pennsylvania Railroad carried daily an average weight per mile of 300,000 pounds of mail, or 150 tons, and received an annual compensation of $3,422 per mile of line. The question arises, Can the Pennsylvania Railroad afford to carry the mail between New York and Philadelphia for less than $3,422 per mile of line, or $83.75 per mile of line per day? The answer depends primarily upon the manner in which the freight is to be moved. If we assume that the mail is to be carried by postal cars, with about 2 tons to each, it is doubtful if the railroad could afford to render the services more cheaply, but on the other hand, should the cars be loaded with, let us say, 3½ tons of mail, the railroad company operates on a margin of profit that warrants a reduction of pay. The calculation upon which the above conclusions rest is as follows: At 2 tons per car, 150 tons of mail demand that 78 cars be passed over each mile of this route daily. Seventy-eight cars would make eight trains.

The average cost per train mile, all operating expenses being taken into account on all trains, is a little under $1, but we will call it $1. The New York Central gives the rate per passenger train per mile at 73 cents. This would make $8 per mile per day chargeable to operating expenses. If to this were added 33 per cent for fixed charges and dividends, improvements chargeable to income, investments, and the like, we should have $10.40 per mile, whic

I have shown that on these routes the average weight is not 5 tons, but more than 7 tons. Mr. Adams finds that with a 5-ton load to a car the expense would be per mile of line $1,533, and the earnings for the estimated weight of 300,000 pounds would be $3,422 per mile of line, or a clear profit over all expense of $1,889 per mile of line.

For these reasons I believe that Congress is fully justified in making a heavy reduction, even heavier than has been proposed by the majority, on the lines where the traffic is dense, but I submit that there is no evidence whatever that any reduction is justified, and that there is no excessive pay on the light roads carrying less than 5,000 pounds as a daily weight.

If the opportunity, therefore, be offered I shall support an amendment to this bill leaving the statute as to the method of computing the daily average weight as it is, and under which the weight has already been ascertained for three years to come on some of the most important lines of the country, and substituting a straight percentage reduction on the roads carrying more than 5,000 pounds and a still heavier reduction on roads carrying more than 48,000 pounds. I am willing, on those routes, to reduce 20 per cent or 30 per cent or even more, because I believe that in view of the method of transportation that they are grossly overpaid under the present rate. paid more than twice as much as the transportation costs.

These are the facts, and no one has controverted them. claim now made that the railroads should have been heard seems strange under the circumstances. We, at their request, set aside two days for a hearing, and when the time came they failed to put in an appearance. They offered no evidence. They evidently thought it was more to their interest to claim "we had no hearing." The fact is, they had the opportunity to be heard and refused to submit proof.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is to-day sufficient to any fair-minded man, in my opinion, to justify a reduction upon the The only objection I have to the proposed reducdense routes. tion of 5 and 10 per cent is that is not great enough. I believe the evidence amply justifies my proposition which I introduced in this House of 20 per cent reduction for these roads.

Mr. CROMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.
Mr. CROMER. If the divisor suggested by the gentleman from Kansas is adopted, will it reduce the railway mail pay?

Mr. STEENERSON. It will indirectly, for it will reduce the average daily weight one-seventh. Consequently when you reduce the daily weight you reduce the pay, but it is objectionable for this reason—that we have four weighing divisions. division is weighed this year and another the next year, and if a contract is entered into for four years you can not change the process of weighing after you made the contract. So you could not have the weight changed in the country for four years; it would be four years before you could enforce fully the Murdock proposition. The gentleman from Kansas stated before the committee that it would take four years, and therefore he would save only one-quarter of the $5,000,000 dollars and for four years we would be running on an inequality. In some division on the old divisor, some on the new. Now, it seems to me when we can accomplish a 14 per cent reduction just as easy without disturbing the system of ascertaining the average daily weight that has been in vogue for forty years that is the right way to accomplish the object that we have in view. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to thank the House for the attention it has given me. I should have liked, and if you could by some means arrange to give me another hour, I should be most delighted to continue the discussion, both of the divisor and all these questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. STEENERSON. I felt that it was not right to let this charge that by a false and erroneous and unjustifiable interpretation of the statute the Post-Office Department had "robbed" the Treasury of so vast a sum of the people's money, go unnoticed. I have so high a regard for the gentleman from Kansas that I was really grieved when he repeated the same accusation, after two months' reflection, here yesterday. In view of the fact that the postal authorities were acting under the advice and on the authority of the Department of Justice, it seems to me strange, if not reckless, in the gentleman to still maintain his accusation. Without hesitation he overrules the highest legal authority in the Government, outside of the judiciary, an authority that the Post-Office Department was bound to respect.

I am satisfied the charge is utterly unfounded; but for the sake of those who are misled by the apparent complications of the question I hope it will again be submitted to the Department of Justice. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is no time to extend, and the gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, two hundred and nine million four hundred and sixteen thousand eight hundred and two dol-lars is a very large amount of money to be carried in one appropriation bill, but this is the amount called for in the bill under consideration for the support of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next. It has been correctly stated that this is the greatest amount of money ever reported to Congress in a single bill. This is a great country, having a population of possibly 86,000,000, exceeding in material wealth any other two countries in the world, and in possible development far exceeding any one of them.

On pages 6, 7, and 8 of the Postmaster-General's report is a statement showing the revenue and expenditures of the Postal Service during the past fiscal year. The revenues were $167,932,782.95, and the expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1906, $178,270,103.02; excess of expenditures over receipts, $10,337,320.07. There can be no question that the prosperity of the country is reflected in the postal receipts. The increase in the revenue during the past fiscal year was the greatest in the history of the Service and amounted to $15,106,197.85, or 9.88 per cent as compared with 6.42 for the preceding year.

For the third quarter the receipts exceeded the expenditures by $286,724.46. I believe that in three or four years at most, if the present growth of the Service continues, the Post-Office Department will be self-sustaining. Not only this, but will be so notwithstanding the burden of performing the Government service in the way of carrying penalty mail and mail under frank without any compensation. This service amounts probably from fifteen to seventeen millions of dollars anually. Giving the Post-Office Department credit for this service there is no postal deficit to-day. There is one observation I wish to make in speaking of the postal deficit, and it is interesting considered in connection with railway mail pay. The present law fixing railway mail pay was enacted in 1873, together with the law fixing railway post-office car pay or rent. It was found that under this law the railroads receive more than a reasonable pay for the service rendered.

1876 Congress reduced this pay 5 per cent, and it was found that the pay was still too high, for the reason that in the year following the deficit was nearly 22 per cent. So that in 1878 Congress again reduced railway mail pay by making a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent. Since that time no reduction in railway mail pay has been made, notwithstanding the fact, beginning with about 1880 or 1882, there has been a large reduction in freight and passenger rates by the railroads. In 1882 the average receipts per ton per mile for freight carried 1 mile by the railroads was 1.24 cents. In 1903 the average was 0.78 of 1 cent, a reduction of more than 37 per cent during this period, and, I may add, there has been a corresponding reduction in passenger rates and also in express charges. the entire postal revenue was less than $27,500,000.

Provision has been made in the bill for 28,728 clerks and 25,530 city letter carriers in first and second class post-offices. The salary of these employees is increased $3,700,000, in round numbers. The pay of 15,222 railway mail clerks is increased by $1,452,083, and the salary of 42,646 rural delivery carriers is increased $3,722,310. In all provision is made for the increase in the salaries of 112,106 employees in the four classes mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Post-Office Committee may congratulate itself for the way it has been treated by the House in the discussion of the bill appropriating money for the postal service for the ensuing fiscal year. No criticism has been heard in the debate.

We have differed among ourselves, and I think that speaks for progress. If we came here with great propositions like there are contained in the bill now under consideration, agree-ing unanimously, standing together as one man, without any difference of opinion, without any variation in thought or argument, all standing together, I do not think there would be much in the bill that would speak for progress or for the advancement of the postal service of this country.

Briefly summing up the most important matters contained in this bill, I might mention first the increase of salaries; next, the decrease in railway-mail pay. Now, some newspapers and some individuals outside of the House have thought fit to charge that the Post-Office Committee saw fit to increase the salaries of post-office clerks, city carriers, railway-mail clerks, and the rural delivery carriers, and then endeavor to recoup the Government by deducting as large an amount as possible from the railroads to make up this increase of expenditure.

I want to say, speaking for myself, Mr. Chairman, and I believe for every member of the majority reporting the bill, that this charge is unfounded. It is true that salaries paid to the employees of the Government, the classes I have mentioned, are increased. To-day more money is required to defray the necessary expenses of living for the individual than at any time in the past thirty-five years. So that the Post-Office Committee believes that the increase of salaries should be made and they have gone about this matter in a way that they think right and proper, and I take it that the fact that no voice has been raised in the consideration of this bill in condemnation of the action of the committee is proof that what we did appeals to the judgment of the Members of the House. In the matter of clerks in city post-offices it is a fact that during the past year the number of resignations in this branch of the service has been continually on the increase.

Now, there must be some cause for this condition, and it is simply this, that clerks in city post-offices, on account of the increased cost of living and on account of the salary to be obtained in the business walks of civil life, have found that they could make more money outside the Government service, and the better class of clerks are constantly leaving it.

Mr. Chairman, a man in civil life has every avenue open to him. He has that which comes to every American citizen, opportunity to the individual, and if he makes use of it he can go on and build himself up and acquire a competency. But take the man in the Government service in one of the city post-offices. What opportunity is there for him? His salary is limited, and I think that statistics show that to-day it is fixed too low, so that in order to do justice and even up the employees in the service of the Government and give to them an increase is necessary and proper.

What I said in reference to city post-office clerks is equally applicable to city carriers. It is more emphatically applicable to the rural delivery carrier. The Post-Office Committee, I believe, have brought into this House, in my judgment, with possibly a few exceptions, in the classification and promotions they provide in the bill, the very best bill that can be obtained, everything considered. We provide in post-offices where the receipts do not exceed $50,000 that the clerks and carriers shall have classification and compulsory promotion from $600, the entrance salary, to $900, and while I am one of those who do not believe that $50,000 was the right sum to fix as a maximum for the smaller offices-I think $40,000 is the proper sum-I submit that in the scheme of classification and compulsory promotion provided for in the bill that clerks and carriers are given a standing and position which insures to them their rights in the Government service.

Heretofore promotions of a clerk in a classified post-office depends to-day, more than anything else, on the favor of the postmaster of his office. The Post-Office Committee does not believe that this should be. We believe that a man in a city post-office, clerk or carrier, that the only requisite for his promotion should be efficiency of service and the length of time he has been in the service. So that I do not think that it is necessary to take up the time of the Committee of the Whole in defending the action of the committee in providing classification and compulsory promotion of clerks and carriers in first and second class offices

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CROMER. Does the gentleman know that under the present law that in cities of less than 75,000 inhabitants a carrier in the first six years of his service receives $50 more than he will receive under the classification given by the committee.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the gentleman's contention and I will explain that.

Mr. CROMER. And in cities above 75,000 that he receives more in the first eight years-

Mr. FINLEY. I am familiar with the contention. I say this to the gentleman, that my personal opinion is that the grade $700 should be abolished as to both clerks and carriers. I think it should be eliminated from the bill, and that the clerk and the carrier should go from $600 to $800, but I am only one member of the Post-Office Committee. The majority thought otherwise, but I may say to the gentleman this, that the provision in the bill providing for the classification and compulsory promotion is infinitely better for the rank and file of present clerks and carriers in the service than the law is to-day, so that, Mr. Chairman, going to the increase of salary for rural carriers, they are resigning at a rate that threatens the efficiency of the service in some sections of the country. I believe between four and five thousand resigned last year. It is claimed that where one resigns there is always somebody to take his place, but that is not absolutely true. In some instances, a few I will say, routes have been temporarily discontinued because of the fact that carriers could not be obtained at the salary provided by law, to wit, $720 annually.

Not only this, but these employees of the Government are entitled to more pay than they receive to-day, because they perform service entitling them to increased pay. Voicing my inperform service entitling them to increased pay. dividual opinion, I may say that the salary should be $900 at least. I believe that because I believe that they perform services which entitle them at least to this much compensation. These employees have no classification. They have no thought of promotion. They furnish their own equipment, horse and vehicle. They support themselves. The report of the Postmaster-General and the statement of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in the hearings show that, approximately speaking, they spend about $300 annually on their equipment and keep of same, leaving only something like $420 for their individual compensation over and above expenses.

The railway mail clerks are provided for in the increase, and I may say that not a word has been spoken anywhere against this increase. Of all the Government employees, the people engaged in the Railway Mail Service perform the hardest and most laborious work, and a service of the greatest danger and risk. And I believe that the time will never come when the American Congress will fail to provide for these people in a proper way.

Now, as to the reduction of railway mail pay. The committee did the very best that it could, and finally brings into the House by a majority report the provisions contained in the bill. First, on the average daily weight of mail, on routes carrying 5,000 pounds and not over 48,000 pounds, a reduction of 5 per cent; on all routes in excess of 48,000 pounds and not in excess of 80,000 pounds, 10 per cent. And on each ton over 80,000 pounds, a flat rate of $19 per ton. The law to-day is $21.37 per ton. I believe, and am satisfied, that this is right, and I have the highest proof of the fact in the action of the House on yesterday. So, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in discussing what the House of Representatives indorsed by a unanimous vote in the passage of a rule on vesterday practically incorporating into the bill the provisions I have alluded to, with some slight modifications.

Now, there are other matters in the bill. One of these is the proper weighing of the mail. And I approach this subject without a great deal of diffidence.

But I want to say this, that the majority of the Post-Office Committee believe that when the mails are weighed for 105 days, to divide by 105 in order to ascertain the daily weight of the mail is correct, and some believe that the law does not need any amendment. I am one of the latter. I believe that when the law requires the mail to be weighed for not less than 90 consecutive working days, and the mail is actually weighed on a route for 90 days, including week days and Sabbath days, that the proper divisor to ascertain the average daily weight of the mail should be 90. The practice of the Department to-day is to weigh for 105 days and then to divide by 90, because they claim that the Sabbath day can not be taken in contemplation of law as a working day. Well, generally speaking, it is not. In the statutes of this country, and in the statutes of every State in the Union, generally speaking, it is not. It is a day of rest. But, Mr. Chairman, when work is done on the Sabbath day in transporting and in weighing the mails, when as much mail is carried on that day as is carried on Monday or on Saturday, or on any other day in the week, I submit that, practically speaking, and in contemplation of law, that the Sabbath day is a working day for this purpose.

I might add right here that personally I believe that it would be for the good of the people of this country if no mails were carried on the Sabbath day. I believe that the Government should not transport its mails on that day, and I believe that if Congress would prohibit this, the American people would indorse its action. Designating the Sabbath day a day of rest, when in point of fact as much work is done on that day as on any other day, is a fallacy. The practice is, I have stated, to weigh one hundred and five days. The statutes require weighing to be for ninety consecutive working days, and they weigh for one hundred and five days and eliminate the fifteen Sabbath days included in that time and divide by ninety. This gives in these cases one-seventh more weight and one-seventh

But, Mr. Chairman, the fallacy of the argument contending that you should weigh the mail for seven days and divide by six is shown by the fact that you might just as well divide by any other number than six. You would as well divide by five, or by four, or by three, and the Post-Office Department practice, where their service is for three days, and the mail is weighed, is to divide by six. Why do they not divide it by two or by three, or some other divisor? Why not? I can see no reason for that. If the mails of the United States were only carried on six days of the week, the railroads would receive the very same pay they do to-day, as a whole, under the present practice, because the weight of the mail is the amount of average of daily weight. Take a route that carries mail six days in a week and one that carries mail seven days. If in the course of the week the same amount of mail is carried on both roads, they would receive the same amount of money. Yes. But the road that carried six days in the week would carry more mail by onesixth on each of its six days than the road that carried the mail for seven days in the week.

So I think that this discussion, while it is interesting, and while it may be fruitless, as we have pretty certain indications that points of order are going to be made, I believe the Post-Office Department can regulate this matter. If they have been practicing thirty years and more something that is contrary to law, and which has cost the Government a great deal of money, the Department can not itself regulate this, but to make sure that which is doubted by some, I am in favor of so amending the law that there can be no doubt about it.

How much time have I consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not undertake to say that the Post-Office Committee should agree and that the House should be of one mind on all of these great questions. I wish to be fair to the railroads and just to the people. I want to call the attention of the House, in connection with this, to another matter, which is of very great importance, one that Congress and various individuals throughout the country have come up against time and again, and that is the question of secondclass postage.

The members of the Post-Office Committee approached this subject with a great deal of care. It is a very important matter. Speaking for myself, I would do nothing that would unreasonably or wrongfully lay the pressure of a finger upon the great newspapers and periodicals of this country. I have stated be-fore that the welfare, the prosperity, and the perpetuation of free institutions in this country is largely in the keeping of the

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have had a great many letters and protests from newspaper men from my district and in the State, and I assume that other Members of this House have had similar letters and protests.

I can join with the gentleman in that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Protests against what they charge to be unjust to the newspapers of the country. the gentleman from South Carolina would go into that matter, and explain to the committee what has been done.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend a question.

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.
Mr. SULZER. Does the present bill, in regard to the newspapers of the country or the Department regulations, change the existing law or change the existing rules of practice in

Mr. FINLEY. The Post-Office appropriation bill does not in the slightest degree change the second-class postage rate, or in any way interfere with the rights and privileges of the newspapers of this country.

Mr. SULZER. That is what I understand.

Mr. FINLEY. They stand to-day where they have stood for years, and I was coming to discussion of that subject.

Mr. SULZER. Right in that connection, and before you come to that discussion, I understand that the Postal Commission, which examined into this question, have recommended a change in the existing law on different things.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will bear with me, I was coming to that.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to hear the gentleman on that. Mr. FINLEY. At the last session of Congress a Postal Commission was appointed, consisting of three members of the House and three Senators. They proceeded, had lengthy hearings, took testimony; and in connection with that subject they considered the question of railroad mail pay. Now, a great many people will think it a remarkable fact that the Postal Commission should do this. Appointed to investigate second-class mail and wind up with the recommendation as to railway mail pay. I want to say what, in my opinion, every gentleman in this House knows, that there is a very close relation between second-class mail and railway mail pay. It is a remarkable coincidence that of the total weight of the mail, excluding equipment, second-class mail constitutes a fraction over 28 per cent; and you will bear in mind that the equipment is something like 46 or 47 per cent. The weight of second-class mail is a fraction over 28 per cent of the total mail, and the railway mail pay is a fraction over 28 per cent of the total cost of the postal service.

It is true that there is a close relation between the two in conducting the postal service of the United States. this country there is a difference of postage. Second-class mail pays 1 cent per pound, first-class mail pays 2 cents an ounce, or fraction thereof, and the difference is very great. But in paying the railroads for carrying the mail the Government pays the same price per pound for carrying a newspaper or a book or print of any kind that it pays for carrying a letter with a 2-cent stamp on it. Now, this practice does not prevail in all countries. In fact, I may say to a limited extent it does not prevail in the ocean-going mail from this country. There, as I remember, the rates are for prints 7 cents a pound and for first-class mail 44 cents a pound. A difference is made in paying for the transportation of the various classes of mail.

Now, whether or not it is best to make a difference in the pay to the railroads for transporting various classes of mail, and if so, what the difference should be, and what the various rates should be, that is one proposition. On the other hand, whether or not the second-class postage should be burdened with an additional charge, is another proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just in that connection, do we pay the same to the railroads per pound for carrying merchandise that we do for carrying letters?

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, yes; the Government pays the same rate of postage for all classes of mail.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. So if we carry 4 pounds of merchandise it is worth just as much to the railroads as 4 pounds of letters.

Mr. FINLEY. When the Post-Office Department carries 4 pounds of merchandise for a citizen of the country it costs the Government just as much as it would to carry 4 pounds of

So, Mr. Chairman, this question has been in the minds of the American people for some years, and I think it is well that Congress has been considering the matter. I could go on discussing this question for quite a while, but there are some other matters that I wish to touch upon.

There is a further provision in the bill with reference to empty mail bags, practically speaking, requiring the railroads to transport empty mail bags free, on the principle that express companies transport crates, baskets, casks, etc., free that have previously gone over the route filled with merchandise. Now, this is new legislation. Whether or not a point of order will be made upon it I do not know.

Mr. JAMES. That could have been included in the resolution which was adopted yesterday.

Mr. FINLEY. There is no doubt about that. Every new proposition of legislation contained in the post-office appropriation bill might have been so included.

Mr. JAMES. Can the gentleman explain to the House why it is that all that was not done and all this money saved to the public Treasury?

Well, I will say to the gentleman that while Mr. FINLEY. he has not been in Congress as long as my friend from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and myself, he knows as much about that subject as anybody else. In order to do this it would have been necessary to obtain the assent or consent of the member of this House highest up, and it would be impossible to do it without that. We did all that we could do when the rule passed by the House on yesterday was secured. But in discussing this matter of empty mail bags, I want to say that there is a provision in the law to-day in which I take some pride. I believe that I was largely instrumental in originating this proposition and bringing about its incorporation into the post-office appropriation bill last year. That provision is as follows:

year. That provision is as follows:

For pay of freight or expressage on postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, $250,000. And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, in the respective weighing divisions of the country immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and such postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, shall be transmitted by either freight or express.

Likelium that if the law is fairly and efficiently only converded that

I believe that if the law is fairly and efficiently enforced that the saving to the Government will be as much as the saving will be from the reduction of railway-mail pay. It is the law to-day and no point of order can be made against it. I believe that when it is in operation, as it will be after the 1st of July-the weighing is going on in the western division now, and they are necessarily operating under it-that after the 1st of July and annually thereafter, the benefit to the Government and the saving in the railway-mail pay arising from the operation of this law will be very considerable, and I do not regard the provision in the bill with reference to requiring them to carry empty mail bags free as anything like as important as the other provisions in the bill for the reduction of the pay to the railroads.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. FINLEY. I will, but I have only a short time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman speaks about carrying the mail bags by express being cheaper. a bill for oranges handed me yesterday by a gentleman from Philadelphia—"40 boxes, at $2.50 a box, $100. Express on 38 boxes to Philadelphia, $2.83 a box, $83.60." That does not look like a cheap way of transporting things from Florida.

Mr. FINLEY. This provision provides for the transportation by freight as well. So that, Mr. Chairman, I think that what was done last year, and what we are putting into this bill, will accomplish much in the way of reducing the pay to the railroads to something like a fair basis. When these provisions of law are in operation I think there will not be so much reason to make a charge that the railroads are overpaid.

The charge has been made in the press of the country and elsewhere that the Post-Office Committee refused the railroads a This charge is untrue, and in justice to the committee, I think the House and the country ought to know it. When the railroads asked for hearings on the proposition, we accorded them time and set aside two days to hear the railroads. When the time came, they did not take advantage of the offer. On the contrary, the statement was made for them that they would submit to the 5 and 10 per cent reduction, and asked that the Postal Commission's recommendation of a flat rate above 80,000 pounds per day be fixed at $19 per ton instead I do not think it fair to the Post-Office Committee for these charges to be heralded throughout the country branding the committee as not being willing to treat the rairoads fairly and justly. The railroads desired no hearing upon the reduction, but were willing to accept the 5 and 10 per cent reduction and the $19 per ton rate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When do they weigh the mail?

Mr. FINLEY. There are four weighing divisions and they weigh one division every year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But what is the date of the weighing?

Mr. FINLEY. The Department fixes that at some time when it is supposed that they will obtain an average mail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that they ought to fix it at this time when we are sending boxes and heavy mail?

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, no; but I haven't time to go into that. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think they should.

Mr. FINLEY. There is another matter, Mr. Chairman, which wish to mention briefly and that is the matter of salary also. The largest class of postal employees, the class which is poorest paid and comes nearer working for the United States Government for nothing, is the fourth-class postmasters, and I will say now, what I have believed for years, that the compensation of these people should be increased.

I am very glad to know that there is a distinguished gentleman in the Post-Office Department, one in whose sense of fairness I have great confidence, in the hearings stated that the compensation, in his judgment, was very low; and I hope that Congress, the next time that it deals with salaries, or with the compensation of postal employees, will not forget the great army of 65,000 men and women, the fourth-class postmasters, whose compensation in the majority of cases is to-day much lower than it should be, and in every instance lower than the compensation paid other postal employees of the Government. hope that this injustice will be remedied soon.

Mr. SPERRY. And under the laws of the Department they are forced to be there all the time and give their full attention, are they not?

Mr. FINLEY. They are, practically speaking, and they are required to furnish to the Government free an office building. Mr. FINLEY. They are required to furnish their own light, heat, and fuel, And as a whole, considering their compengenerally speaking. sation, and comparing it with the compensations paid to other classes of the postal service, they are the very poorest paid. One thing I neglected to say, or did not think of saying, but it is true, is that Congress in dealing with the postal service acts upon the principle that if an office is small no particular consideration should be paid it or reasonable compensation paid for services performed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER].

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the purpose of the increase of the salary appropriation is to better the financial condition of all the post-office employees. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and its members to the effect the change proposed in this bill will have on the letter carriers, and hope the chairman will propose an amendment to remedy its defects.

The changes proposed will increase the salaries of the carriers who now receive $1,000 per annum in the large cities and $850 in the small cities, but it will decrease the income of all carriers who do not now receive the maximum salaries in either the first or second class cities. They number between 6,500 and 7,000, or about 30 per cent of all the carriers in the service of the Government, according to a statement made by the Postmaster-General under date of May 17, 1906, addressed to the Hon. Boies Penrose, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the United States Senate.

It can be seen from this table, beginning with the $600 grade in first-class post-offices, it would take nine years to earn the amount of money under the proposed law that would be earned in the same period of time under the present law.

	At present rate.	Proposed new rate.
First year . Second year . Third year . Fourth year . Fifth year . Sixth year . Seventh year . Eighth year . Ninth year .	1,000 1,000 1,000 1,000	$600 700 800 900 1,000 1,100 1,100 1,100
Total	8,400	8,400

In the second-class cities all carriers beginning at the $600 grade would have to serve seven years before the amount of money earned would equal the amount earned under the present law, as shown by this table that I submit:

	At present rate.	Proposed new rate.
First year Second year Third year Fourth year Fifth year Sixth year Seventh year	$600 850 850 850 850 850 850	$600 700 800 900 900 900 900
Total	5, 700	5,700

These tables show that there will be no increase in the income of 30 per cent of the carriers in the first-class cities under the proposed law until the tenth year of their regular service and until the eighth year in the second-class cities.

It is also plain from these tables that the 30 per cent referred to will not only receive no increase in the next fiscal year, but will suffer a reduction of $100 in the large cities and $150 in the small cities.

In offices of the first class under the present law, at the end of six years, the average time it takes a carrier to reach the highest grade he can be promoted to, his earnings will amount to the following: Nineteen dollars per month as substitute, which is the average pay for twelve months, equals $228 per annum. years, average time served as substitute, equals $684, total earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service, $800 second year of regular service, and $1,000 third year of regular service equal $3,084, the total earnings for six years which, divided by six, gives $514 as the average salary per year for six years.

In offices of the first class under the plan proposed in the postoffice appropriation bill, at the end of six years the amount earned would be as follows: Nineteen dollars per month as substitute for twelve months equals $228 per annum, or $684, the total earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular year of regular service, and $800 third year of regular service, and $800 third year of regular service, equal $2,784, the total earnings for six years, which, divided by six, gives $464 as the average salary per year for six years. Five hundred and fourteen dollars average under present law for six years, less $464, average under proposed law for six years, leaves $50 less average earnings per year for each of the six years, which in all amounts to $300 in six years in favor of the present law.

In small cities under the present law at the end of five years, the average time it takes a carrier to reach the highest grade he can be promoted to, his earnings will amount to the following: Nineteen dollars per month as substitute for twelve months equals $228 per annum, or $684, the total earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service and $850 second year of regular service equal $2,134, the total earnings for five years, which, divided by five, gives $426.80 as the average salary per annum for five years.

In small cities under the plan proposed in the post-office appropriation bill, at the end of five years the amount earned would be as follows: Six hundred and eighty-four dollars, total would be as follows: Six hundred and eighty-four dollars, total earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service and $700 second year of regular service equal $1,984 as the total earnings for five years, which, divided by five, gives $396.80 as the average salary per annum for five years. Four hundred and twenty-six dollars and eighty cents, average salary per annum under present law loss $206.80 as average salary per annum under present law, less $396.80, average salary per annum under proposed law, leaves $30 less per year for each of five years under the proposed law, or $150 in five years in favor of present law.

To extend it out a little further, the first table shows that it will take nine years in the regular service under the proposed law for a carrier to earn an amount equivalent to that which he will earn under the present law. Adding to that table the three years he serves as substitute, it will be seen from the following table that he must serve twelve years under the proposed law to earn the equivalent of his earnings in twelve years under the present law, which is $9,084 in either case:

	Under the present law.	Under the proposed law.
For first six years	$3,084	$2,784
Seventh year	1,000	900
Eighth year	1,000	1,000
Ninth year	1,000	1,100
Tenth year	1,000	1,100
Eleventh year	1,000	1,100
Twelfth year	1,000	1,100
Total, twelve years	9,084	9,084

It is therefore obvious that there will be no increase of income under the proposed law until his thirteenth year of service.

I am discussing now, Mr. Chairman, the 30 per cent of the carriers. I propose to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the consideration of the committee, which I will ask the Clerk to read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for the information of the committee in the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the salaries of letter carriers in the city-delivery service shall be graded as follows:

In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more there shall be five grades, as follows: First grade, salary, $600; second grade, salary, $800; third grade, salary, $1,000; fourth grade, salary, $1,100; fifth grade, salary, $1,200.

In all cities which contain a population of less than 75,000 there shall be four grades, as follows: First grade, salary, $600; second grade, salary, $50; third grade, salary, $900; fourth grade, salary, $1,000: Provided. That all carriers entitled to promotion under this act shall be promoted to the next highest grade on July 1, 1907, or at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade; but no promotions to the fifth grade shall be made in cities of more than 75,000 population, nor to the fourth grade in cities of less than 75,000 population until on and after July 1, 1908, when all carriers who have served one year of service in the next lower grade will be entitled to all promotions progressively.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I submit as part of my re-

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. Chairman, I submit as part of my remarks a list of offices where the carriers would only be raised $50 per annum to the $900 grade if the proposed plan is adopted, and it would take them four years to reach this grade, while under the present law they receive a maximum salary of $850 after serving one year at $600. If the amendment I propose is adopted, they will be brought up to $1,000 per annum.

Mr. LORIMER. The letter-carrier service differs from all other. They are required to serve as substitutes until regularly appointed. The average time of a substitute's service is three years. The average pay per month during this service is $19. They report for duty every day, wait around the office for such extra work as the postmaster may assign to them, or to take the place of a letter carrier who may be ab-

I submit this statement of the average daily and annual income of the carrier during a period of first twenty years' service under the proposed plan in cities where the annual gross receipts are in excess of $200,000: Nineteen dollars per month, average pay as substitute, for twelve months equals $228 per annum, or $684 earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service, $700 second year of regular service, $800 third year of regular service, $900 fourth year of regular service, and $1,000 fifth year of regular serivce, making $4,684 as total earnings for eight years. One thousand one hundred dollars maximum salary per year for twelve years equals $13,200, earnings for twelve years at maximum salary, making $17,884 the total earnings for twenty years, an average of $894.20 per annum for twenty years, or an average of $2.45 per day for twenty years.

Under the change proposed in offices where the annual gross receipts are at least $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000 the average annual and daily salary of carriers will be as follows: Nineteen dollars per month, which is the average pay as substitute, for twelve months equals $228 per annum, or $684, earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service, $700 second year of regular service, $800 third year of regular service, and $900 fourth year of regular service, making $3,684 as total earnings for seven years. One thousand dollars maximum salary per year for thirteen years equals $13,000, total earnings for thirteen years at maximum salary, making $16,684 the total earnings for twenty years, an average salary of $834.20 per year, or an average salary of $2.29 per day.

Under the change proposed in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000, the average salary of carriers for twenty years will be as follows: Nineteen dollars, average earnings per month, as substitute, for twelve months equals $228, average earnings per annum, or $684, earnings for three years as substitute; $600 first year of regular service, $700 second year of regular service, and $800 third year of regular service, making $2,784, total earnings for six years. Nine hundred dollars, maximum salary for fourteen years, equals $12,600, total for fourteen years at maximum salary of $900, making $15,384 the total amount earned in twenty years, an average salary of $769.20 per year, or an average of $2.11 per day.

When we consider that carriers serve three years at $19 per month as substitutes, we must know that they enter the regular service very poor and in debt to every person from whom they can borrow, and in many cases have mortgages on the very beds in which they sleep. It is not doing too much for them to amend the proposed law so as to conform with the present law, and to continue to promote them from the $600 grade to the $800 grade after one year of service, and from the $800 grade to the $1,000 grade after two years.

Such an amendment should prevail in common fairness to this intelligent and faithful set of men. It is true the law provides that carriers shall work eight hours a day, but they actually put in twelve or more hours each day. They report at 6 in the morning and do not finish until 6 or later in the evening. They lay off from one-half to two hours at different intervals during the day, for which they receive no credit. It is time occupied just as much as though they were on their routes delivering mail.

When we consider further that carriers enter the service at an average age of 25 years and can only earn in the best twenty years of their lives under the proposed law in large cities $17,884, or an average of $894 per year, or $2.45 a day; in cities of 75,000 population, $16,880 in twenty years, or an average of $834.20 per year, or $2.29 per day; in small cities, in twenty years a total of $15,384, or $769.20 per year, $2.11 per day, I am convinced the country will justify Congress in promoting the carriers to a maximum salary of $1,200 per year, and I hope the House will see the equity of this amendment and at last give these deserving men their just deserts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no complaint of the action of the committee. I know this committee has put in a good deal of time preparing this very large appropriation bill, and it can not be supposed that they have gone into every little detail in connection with every item of appropriation contained in this bill, and so I submit these remarks in order that the chairman of the committee and his committee may give them careful consideration before we come to the final passage of this bill. I know that the clerks of this country are very much gratifiedwhile they are not receiving under this appropriation all that they would desire—that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have attempted to do something for them.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. LORIMER. I will be very glad to do so.
Mr. SOUTHARD. I see you have made the maximum salary for the clerks $1,200 and for the carriers $1,100. What was the occasion for that?

Mr. LORIMER. I am not a member of the committee, and the chairman of the committee, I am sure, will be glad to answer the question. I say I know that the clerks are very much gratified at what the committee has done for them, and it is not in a spirit of complaining that I rise here to-day. wanted to call the attention of the committee to the conditions as they would be under the bill that they propose, and hope that they will make such recommendations as will rectify these faults in their present bill. I reserve the balance of my time and yield it back to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the balance of his time and yields it back to the chairman of the

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the time remaining for general debate, which is to close at 4 o'clock, I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, before addressing the House on the main subject to which I will later invite attention, that of the railway mail pay, I wish to make some passing mention on the increases of salaries provided for the personnel of the postal service.

Some criticism has been lodged against the committee recommendation in that our scale of promotion has not been sufficient to meet the demands of the country in this service. But I believe that the House and the country will appprove the statement that we have been most liberal in our allowances for promotions, and that no bill has ever before been presented to the House that carried a larger amount for promotions and extended increase of salary to a larger number of employees. When you stop to consider that the promotions and increases of salary that are provided in this bill extend to nearly 100,000 people you will get some idea of the scope of this service and of the benefits that will accrue from the committee's recommendation.

In the rural free-delivery service, for the standard route we have raised the salary $120, raising it from $720 to $840, or an increase of $10 per month. That is the maximum for the standard route which, as the committee knows, is 24 miles. There is a regulation of the Department that provides a graduated diminishing amount for routes of less than 24 miles, and carriers on those routes will benefit likewise by this increase of more than 16 per cent.

Coming to the question of the increases for the city letter carriers, under the provisions recommended by the committee there is not a letter carrier in the service who will not receive some increase of salary.

Mr. GOEBEL and Mr. LORIMER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. First to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

Mr. GOEBEL. Does the letter carrier of the first grade receive any increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. The letter carrier of the first grade does receive an increase.

Mr. GOEBEL. In what way?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because at present the law provides that the maximum pay for letter carriers in cities having a population above 75,000 shall be $1,000, while the bill recommended by the committee, as the gentleman is well aware, provides for an increase of $100, making the maximum $1,100. Mr. GOEBEL. Oh, but the gentleman did not answer my

Mr. STAFFORD. I may have failed to grasp the purport of the question.

Mr. GOEBEL. I mean the letter carriers of the first grade. Mr. STAFFORD. The letter carriers of those post-offices in cities above 75,000 population? Every carrier in the service in those cities having 75,000 population and a great proportion of the letter carriers in cities having 75,000 population receiving the maximum salary of $1,000 will by reason of this law on July 1 next be promoted to receive $1,100.

Mr. GOEBEL. The gentleman does not answer the question. My question was: The present salary is $600 in the first grade, and does the carrier receive an increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. I misunderstood the gentleman's designa-tion of "first grade," thinking that he referred to those offices which carry the maximum salary in cities of 75,000 and over. No; I will say to the gentleman in answer to his query, not increase the starting point whatsoever as far as carriers are concerned, and with none of this character of employment save the rural letter carriers, where they will receive the maximum amount of $840, provided they are serving on a standard route, as soon as they enter the service, and except in the case of clerks in second-class offices. Heretofore it has been the rule, so far as the clerks attached to second-class offices were concerned, that they started at a salary of $400 and $500.

Now, the committee recommends the abolishment of those low grades, because we believed, following the recommendations of the Post-Office Department, that you can obtain and should obtain also in these smaller offices, men who are to be retained in the service years and years, of a higher grade of efficiency by starting them at a living salary of $600 rather than the salary which has been provided heretofore of $400 and $500. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

LORIMERI

Mr. LORIMER. Under the existing law carriers now serving in the first grade at $600 per year on the 1st day of next July will be promoted to $800 a year in large cities, and those residing in small cities of the first grade at $600 a year will be promoted to $850. Now, is it not a fact that under this proposed law the carriers working in large cities will only receive an increase of $100, and the same applies to the small cities, which would amount to a loss of $100 on the 1st of July to every carrier in large cities and to $150 to a carrier in small cities?

Mr. STAFFORD. I followed carefully the address made by the gentleman a few minutes before I began to address the committee as to the letter-carrier salary. There can be no question but what we provide in our scheme of increase of $100 yearly rather than at present of $200 in cities above 75,000 population, and of $250 in cities of the second grade, because we want to make this service uniform with the clerical service by providing that both the clerks and the carriers should receive promotion at the same time, and whenever the carriers shall be transferred into the clerical service or transferred from the clerical service into the carrier service they will be receiving the same grade of salaries as those in the corresponding service. We followed the rule which prevails as to clerks rather than as to carriers, believing that the assurance of $100 every year to carriers, that it would not detract any persons from entering into service, even though increase of salary would not be as great as heretofore.

But I want to impress upon the committee the fact that we demote the salary of no man in the service, but provide for an increase of salary for every carrier, whether he is a rural or city carrier, for every post-office clerk, and for every railway mail clerk, no matter in what grade of service.

Mr. LORIMER. Will the gentleman submit to one further question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Gladly. Mr. LORIMER. Is it not a fact that when clerks go into the service now they become at once, within thirty days, under the present conditions, able to earn $600 a year, and where the carriers go into service the average service as substitutes is three years, when they must report every day and receive an average of $19 a month, which makes a difference in the carrier's service of three years as against that of allowing the clerks to get theirs within thirty days?

Mr. STAFFORD. In this bill we have sought to correct the inadequacy of payment which has prevailed heretofore, as far as the salaries of substitute carriers are concerned, by providing a new character of service, known as "auxiliary service," whereby we authorize the Department to employ for a minimum service each day of two or more hours these substitutes, so that they will not be compelled to live on starvation wages until they get into the regular service, and that this auxiliary service applies not only to the letter carriers, but applies likewise to the clerks.

It is the principle of this proposed legislation, and it is a principle which follows the recommendation of the Department to have these services interchangeable; to have the carrier take up some part of the work of the clerks, so that he can at times when in the post-office be occupied in clerical I can not take up so much time on this phase of the subject because I want to get to the subject of the railway mail pay

Mr. NORRIS. The question that I want to ask you is about the one that you were talking about when you were diverted. I want to know specifically the position of the gentleman as to the exact increase given to carriers in post-offices of the second class

Mr. STAFFORD. I will answer the gentleman that in so far as the grade of salaries for carriers are concerned they do not follow the same classification as post-offices of the second class and of the first class. There is a gradation on the basis of population, the dividing line being 75,000 population. So that letter carriers employed in cities which have a population of less than 75,000 under the present law receive a maximum of $850. The committee departs from the population plan, following the recommendation of the Department, and I believe the whole House will approve of the equity of the recommendation in departing from the population and taking up gross re-celpts as the determiner. Under the former plan an office Under the former plan an office would have to be determined, before entering the next grade, by reason of the census returns, which only occur every ten

We believe that the postal returns, the gross receipts of the office, are a more proper criterion to determine the character of the office than population. So we have taken the average gross receipts of $200,000, which correspond to the receipts of offices located in cities with 75,000, and then we create a new grade with $50,000 gross receipts as the dividing line. So where to-day letter carriers who are employed in offices having gross receipts of less than $200,000 and more than $50,000 the maximum salary received is $850, we provide a maximum salary of $850, and where the receipts are under $50,000 the maximum salary will be $900 instead of $850.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the limit now?

Mr. NORRIS. What is the limit is $850.

Mr. STAFFORD. The limit is $850.

Mr. NORRIS. So there will be a raise of $50 for carriers in second-class offices where the gross receipts are less than $50,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. In second-class offices and all in those first-class offices below $50,000 gross receipts, because $40,000 gross receipts form the dividing line between first and second class offices, and in all those first-class offices which have gross receipts above $50,000 and up to $200,000, where the carriers are to-day generally receiving $850 as the maximum, they will receive this coming year a $50 promotion and the next year to the limit of $1,000. So these carriers will have an opportunity for promotion in two years to the maximum of $1,000, while in the smaller offices, below $50,000, they will have their limit as $900.

Mr. NORRIS. That will be an increase of $50.

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be an increase in these offices of $50. Every carrier will receive that increase, and in most offices carriers receiving $850 will go to $1,000 in two years.

Mr. CROMER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana for one short question.

Mr. CROMER. By this bill clerks in post-offices whose gross receipts are less than $50,000 go to $900. Will you tell us how a clerk in that office can go to $1,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. A clerk can go in those offices having between $50,000 and $40,000 receipts, which latter amount is the line of demarcation between first and second class offices, not only to $1,000 but to $1,200, just the same as in this bill we provide for compulsory promotion of clerks in the largest offices to the $1,100 grade, which is the sixth grade, but nevertheless have another grade which is the seventh grade, of We do not provide for compulsory promotion to that last grade, but we provide by appropriation an amount which will permit of the promotion of 50 per cent of these clerks now employed at $1,100. Now, to answer specifically the question of the gentleman, I will say that it will depend entirely upon the action of the Post-Office Department. If the Department approves, and the appropriations are made by Congress, there will be nothing to prevent a clerk in a second-class office, which is an office having less than $40,000 gross receipts, being promoted, not compulsorily, but at the discretion of the Department, to $1,000, and in an office between $40,000 and $50,000, up to $1,200, just the same as in any office of the first class

Mr. CROMER. Is there any law now that enables the Department to increase the salaries of clerks? Are clerks graded by law at the present time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will gladly answer the gentleman. suppose from his long service on the Post-Office Committee he is acquainted with the fact that there is no law pertaining to the classification of clerks, and, as I stated a few minutes ago, the clerks in second-class offices started at $400 and $500, while under this bill we start them all at the same level of $600, and provide for compulsory promotion to $900-$100 each year-if they are employed in localities where the gross receipts of the office are under $50,000. If between $50,000 and $200,000, we provide for compulsory promotion for four years, to $1,000, and if above $200,000 gross receipts, then to the grade of $1,100, with promotions each year of $100. I do not believe that you will find anywhere in private employment any business make such a regular promotion in salary for like service as that which we provide in this bill by giving to every clerk and carrier a promotion of 16 per cent, basing it upon the lowest salary of $600 a year until they reach the maximum compulsory promotion salary provided in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. I understood the gentleman to say that the maximum compulsory promotion salary provided in this bill.

mum pay of clerks in this bill is $1,200 and that the maximum pay of carriers is $1,100, and that the purpose of the committee was to have these people interchanged. Now, does the gentle-man believe for a moment that a clerk who is able to receive a maximum salary of $1,200 in his particular line of endeavor will exchange with a letter carrier, who would only receive $1,100 at his best?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; if the conditions are such as to impel the clerk to seek outdoor employment. It has been called to the attention of the committee time and time again that men are obliged to give up the arduous service in the railway mail, at a higher compensation, and accept lower pay in some clerical position that will permit them to remain at home, without the wear and tear consequent on traveling. My attention has been called to cases where by reason of confinement of clerks-and that service is dreadfully confining and arduous—that they will be forced and will gladly accept $100 less compensation for outdoor employment. So far as the carriers are concerned, if they wish to go into the higher grade and higher character of service, it is provided that they shall be transferred to the clerical service, allowing them to go in the same grade and then to be promoted and advance farther into the higher class of service, like superintendent, cashiers, and other employment of that character.
Mr. CROMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield further, for my time is getting short

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to ask the gentleman just one ques-

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman for a very brief question.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to ask the gentleman if he replied to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the injustice done the carriers in the large cities?

Mr. STAFFORD. I intended to meet that argument; I do not know whether I fully met it or not. I hardly think my statement satisfied the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then the only chance we have is to move an amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the committee recommendation worthy of support.

Mr. CROMER. Now will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman for a ques-

How many clerks will have their salaries reduced by this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not a position in the service today, as I said a few moments ago, and if the gentleman had been following me-

Mr. CROMER. I have been following the gentleman. Mr. STAFFORD. He would have heard, as I specially emphasized the fact, where there is any demotion in salary whatever as carried in this bill.

Mr. CROMER. How will the clerks in the second-class postoffices get $1,000 under this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because they are provided for in the number of clerks carrying the salary of $1,000, just as the clerks that are now receiving $1,200, where there is no compulsory promotion. They will receive the same $1,200 salary because we provide for the number of clerks receiving that salary, and provide 50 per cent of those employed now in the $1,100 grade

Now, Mr. Chairman, coming to the question of the increase of salary provided in the railway mail service, the committee has recommended an arbitrary increase of $100 in all the grades of service below $1,500. We have not only provided for an increase of $100 for every man employed in the railway mail service, but we have raised the grades of those employed in that service just $100. So where a man who has heretofore been employed and has been receiving $1,500 for that character of work, hereafter he will receive $1,600. The man now employed at $1,400 in that character of work will hereafter receive $1,500, and so down the line, starting at $800. No one will question but that this service requires the most proficient men of any employment in the service. Members must not have their attention diverted by the disparagement of the salary of $1,600 for the railway mail employee and $1,200 provided for the post-office clerk, because you must take into consideration that the $1,600 class of railway mail clerks are men in charge of crews on traveling railway post-office cars, and they, like most of these high-salaried clerks, are obliged to be absent from home one-half to one-third of the time, and entail expenses while absent from home, which amount on an average to $175 to $250 a year, and that amount must necessarily be deducted from the salary we provide for these men in this service. So when the committee considers carefully these respective promotions for the different services, I think they will agree that the committee has dealt liberally and fairly with the clerks and carriers connected with the postal service.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield for one question.

Mr. STERLING. On Saturday I offered a table showing that the carriers would not be increased in salary for five years in certain offices and in other offices for ten years, and I under-stood the gentleman to say at that time I was wrong about it. I would ask the gentleman to point out wherein I was wrong.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will look at the Record, I believe he will see I attracted his attention so far as clerks are concerned and only so far as clerks are concerned.

Mr. STERLING. My proposition applied to carriers. Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman, though I may have been in error, to have included in his statement not only carriers, but clerks, and I was inviting his attention as to whether or not he was in error so far as clerks were concerned.

Taking up the question of railway mail pay, everyone will admit that it is a very intricate subject, and that it requires a lifelong study by an expert before he is qualified to speak on the subject of the cost of railway transportation; but the mere abstruseness of the subject and a lack of acquaintance with details should not deter legislators in favoring a reduction of railway mail pay if certain undisputed facts warrant this reduction. The pay for the transportation of mails is based upon the law of 1873, which provides a sliding scale of pay according to the weight carried. That law was a reenactment of a practice of the Department which had been in force many years. I may say that up to the time of the enactment of the law of 1873 there had been no change in the pay for the carriage of mail from the time of the enactment of the law of 1845, which provided for the pay according to three grades of service, of $50, $100, and $300 per mile yearly, regardless of weight carried. A couple of years thereafter the maximum was increased 25 per cent when night service was rendered, making the maximum $375.

So the rates of pay as embodied in the law of 1873 was the reenactment of departmental regulations, except as to the last class. The only new feature in the law that differed from the prior practice was that it created a new basis of pay on all those roads carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds daily, where, for each additional 2,000 pounds carried they were to receive at the annual rate of $25. This law was amended in 1876 by a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent, and again, in 1878, by a horizontal reduction of 5 per cent, and with those percentages of reduction the highest rate for the smallest amount of mail carried, which is 200 pounds or less on a daily average throughout the year, is $42.75, which, I wish to call to the attention of the committee, is at the rate of $427.50 per ton. The rate pro-vided by this law, subject to this percentage of reduction for the carriage of 5,000 pounds, is $171, or at the rate of $68.40 per ton. The difference in rate between that charged for the weight of 5,000 pounds and that of 200 pounds and under is 625 per cent less than the-

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question-Mr. STAFFORD. In just one minute, when I finish this. Six hundred and twenty-five per cent less than the maximum pay; and the rate of $21.37 per ton above 5,000 pounds as compared with the maximum pay is 2,000 per cent less, or one-twentieth of the amount of the maximum pay of $427.50. Now

Mr. MADDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how he justifies the action of the committee which reduces the compensation of the carriers getting $600 and a right of promotion to $800, so that they now only get $700?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had been in the House when that subject was under discussion, the gentleman would have been informed, so far as I was able to inform him when a like query was propounded by the gentleman's colleague from I can not at this time, because I went over it once or twice, go over the subject again, as I wish to direct the attention of the committee now to the subject of railway mail pay. I must beg to be excused from further yielding on that subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Will not the gentleman permit a single question?

Mr. STAFFORD. On that subject I will have to decline to yield, because I have gone over that already.

Mr. MADDEN. Will not the gentleman let me ask him one more question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not, if it is on that subject. Mr. Chairman, I will have to decline to yield.

Mr. SPERRY. Will the gentleman yield to a single question which he can answer "yes" or "no?"

Mr. STAFFORD. I have declined to yield for a question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden], because it is something I have already covered. I will gladly yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. SPERRY. Does the law provide for an increase in the salary of assistant superintendents and chief clerks in the railway mail service?

Mr. STAFFORD. To which law does the gentleman refer? Mr. SPERRY. I should have said the bill which has been presented.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill of course provides for the employees now engaged in the service, both as to chief clerks and assistant superintendents, but no increase of salary is made in those grades.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Little-FIELD ?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The bill for last year, as I remember it, provided for increases in the salaries of some of the railway mail clerks, and they failed to get their increases by reason of the fact that there was not sufficient appropriation for the increase. For instance, a clerk that was getting a thousand dollars, if the appropriation had been made, would have been receiving now $1,100. Is there any provision made for those clerks and those promotions in this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had been present in the Chamber he would have heard me state that every clerk in the railway mail service receives an increase of salary of $100 at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That does not answer this question. There were some railway mail clerks who were expected to receive a promotion under the last bill, the bill for the fiscal year 1907, and they did not receive it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will answer the gentleman, although it is outside of the pertinency of my remarks, and say that the committee can not legislate to meet the expectations of every person in the service.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, that all may be true.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will have to decline to yield further, because it is apart from the subject-matter on which I am addressing the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon if it is not germane to his remarks.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am touching on the question of railway mail pay, and if the gentleman will excuse me, as my time is limited I wish to continue the address along that line.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I trust that some time some of the gentlemen of the committee will give me the information.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the bill is under consideration under the five-minute rule I will be glad to do so.

Coming again to the question of rates of pay at present in force, I call attention to the following table, which I will print as a part of my remarks:

Pay per mile per annum.

Average weight of mails per day carried over whole length of route.	Rates al- lowable under act of Mar. 3, 1873.	of July 12,	Rates allowable to land- grant railroads, being 80 per cent of allow- ance to other railroads, un- der act of July 12, 1876.
200 pounds	$50.00	$42,75	$34. 20
500 pounds	75.00	64.12	51.30
1,000 pounds	100.00	85.50	68.40
1,500 pounds	125.00	106.87	85.50
2,000 pounds	150.00	128.25	102.60
3,500 pounds	175.00	149.62	119.70
5,000 pounds		171.00 21.37	136.80 17.10

Mention should also be made that those railroads that have received land-grant aid which was conditioned upon their carrying the mail at such rates as Congress should determine receive but 80 per cent of the present rates.

The change suggested provides for a 5 per cent reduction of the pay on all those routes which carry an excess daily of 5,000 pounds up to 48,000 pounds, and on those routes in excess of 48,000 pounds, 10 per cent. The rate per ton above 5,000 pounds, as now provided in existing law, is $21.37, which, with the 5 per cent reduction, amounts to $20.30 per ton on those routes in excess of 5,000 pounds, and of $19.24, or 10 per cent reduction, on those routes which carry an average daily weight in excess of 48,000 pounds.

These rates are pure tonnage charges that have no relation whatsoever to frequency or character of service. In fact, the basic charge for railway-mail carriage is that of tonnage rather than expedition, frequency of service, or space of cars utilized. However, to a small degree the railroads receive compensation based upon the space used for the carriage of the mail, which, indirectly, because it is used solely on the heavy lines, is a receive to frequency of service.

indirectly, because it is used solely on the heavy lines, is a payment for frequency of service.

This is the so-called "railway post-office service" which, in other words, are the traveling post-offices. These vary in size from 40 to 65 and 70 feet in length, and the pay is based entirely on mileage. No change in the rate of pay has been made since 1873, when allowance was first granted for this character of service. The rates of pay vary from $25 per daily line per annum for a 40-foot car, $30 per daily line for a 45-foot car, $40 per daily line for a 50-foot car, and $50 per daily line for a car being 55 feet.

A daily line of railway post-office cars in postal parlance means a route on which a car makes a round trip daily, so that the rate per mail per annum for the use and carriage of one of these cars is one-half of the rates just mentioned.

This extra compensation for traveling post-office cars is based on the space used and service rendered rather than upon the tonnage carried. From 1864, when this service was first introduced at the request of the Post-Office Department, down to 1873 no extra pay was made for this service. It appears from the debates at the time of the enactment of this legislation that the few railroads which were carrying the great bulk of the mail were protesting that the maximum limit of pay of $375 per mile per annum was not adequate and did not compensate them for the added service in transporting the additional and increasing weight, because other roads carrying an amount much less in weight received the same maximum pay.

When this provision for extra compensation for railroad postoffice service was enacted the existing contracts with the railroad companies contained a provision whereby they were obligated to provide full cars or parts of cars on call of the Post-Office Department. This method of payment for this service was never debated in the House. It had its birth and origin in the Senate by amendment to the annual post-office appropriation bill, and was agreed to in committee of conference and passed the House without any debate or explanation.

Ever since I have been in Congress I could not understand the incongruity of rates provided by the law between that of $25 for a 40-foot car and of $50 for a 55-foot car, a 100 per cent increase of pay for about 50 per cent increase of space. I have sought in the Post-Office Committee in prior Congresses to remedy this incongruity; and if the recommendation of the Post-Office Committee prevails, the rate will be based proportionately to space, using the $25 rate as the lowest amount, which remains unchanged for the 40-foot car, and providing $27.50 for the 45-foot instead of $30, and $32.50 instead of $40 for the 50-foot, and $40 instead of $50 for the 55-foot car and above. You will notice—

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Is that included in the proposition , which was agreed to yesterday?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was included in the proposition that was agreed to yesterday.

The reduction of the rate from that now paid for the largersized car, which is 55 feet and over, and which is in general use in the Railway Mail Service, the committee will see is 20 per cent. The estimate of the Department on the proposed reductions of pay for this railway post-office service is $993,000, which, according to my calculation, is 1.8 per cent of the total amount estimated for railway mail pay for the next fiscal year.

But the question before the House is whether the recommendation for reduction of railway mail pay is proper and fair in view of the service rendered. All acknowledge that with density of traffic, whether freight or passenger, there come economies in the service which diminish the cost of transportation proportionately greater than the increase in the volume of traffic. This feature is present and should be controlling in determining the proper rate for railway mail pay. Because the density in volume of railway mail has increased tremendously during the past thirty years and there has been no corresponding reduction in the rate of pay on those routes which have this dense traffic is the reason, and the justification if need be, for the reduction of pay on those routes which carry a daily average in excess of 5,000 pounds.

If you take the weights now carried on the respective routes and compare them with those when the last reduction in mail pay was made, in 1878, you will find that the weights have increased many fold. The heaviest route thirty years ago carried an average daily weight of 39,000 pounds, while at present the heaviest route is more than 450,000 pounds. Those who believe that there should be no reduction in rates advance the argument that notwithstanding there has been no diminution in the rate charged, there has been a decrease of 16 per cent in the average rate per ton per mile as computed upon the gross tonnage carried at the present aggregate pay for railway mail carriage. But I will remind gentlemen that that decrease has been brought about by the lowering rate of pay on those roads carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds, because, as the House will see, the rate is $21.37 for every additional 2,000 pounds above that weight. The reason for that lowering proportionate rate on the gross tons carried has been the lower rate—the lower average rate-paid to those roads carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds where the additional weight has been very large.

It is generally agreed by railway traffic authorities that with the density of tonnage either in freight, passenger, or express there comes a corresponding economy in the service which permits of a reduction in rates by reason of the increasing economies, and this decreasing proportionate cost of service with increasing volume is present in the carriage of the mail by railroads. There is a greater return to the railway companies from passenger traffic when the seating capacity of the coaches is three-fourths filled than when only one-fourth, and so where a train carries four coaches full of passengers as compared with one car full.

The cost of conducting and transportation is about the same per train load whether the passenger train consists of one or such a number of additional cars that the motor power of the engine is capable of banking engine is capable of hauling.

But there is another question that impresses itself in this connection, and that is whether the mail is an incident to or coequal with the passenger service. I contend that it is but an incident, just like and in the same category with the sleeping-car service, and that the rate should be based on that proportionate charge that accrues by reason of the additional service, and by adding its share of the charges for maintenance, and a reasonable allowance for profit. That was the view taken by so eminent a Member as the present Speaker of this House when this matter was under consideration in the House more than thirty years ago, when, on May 4, 1876, he used this language.

The true rule is, I apprehend, that the Post-Office Department should only be charged for mail service for the additional cost incurred on its own account, and that the cost of the other services should be estimated as if the postal car was not transported.

This view point as the proper basis on which to estimate the railway mail pay is that followed by the railroads in determining the proper charge for sleeping-car service and the passenger rate for commutation service. The latter rate on some trunk lines for suburban service is 6 mills per mile, but this rate, if applied to all passenger service, would be far from compensatory. The commutation rate is justified because this traffic is regular and frequent, and its density is far greater than with the ordinary passenger service, where the average number of passengers to the coach are fewer and varying.

But the mail has a distinctive characteristic that is not present in so marked a degree with other classes of traffic, in that it is certain, continuous, and regular. This unvarying quality affords economies in handling and transportation which increases over the other traffics as it predominates.

Considering these elemental facts of the manifold increase in weight and the corresponding increase in density of mail traffic, with the resulting economies to the railroads in carrying this increased traffic, and its peculiar nature, the reduction of railway mail pay will be confirmed on investigation as fair and

But consider for a moment the figures of the railroads, that it costs 10 to 12 cents for the carriage of one of these traveling post-offices 1 mile. Let us see what the pay will be as based upon the cut rates.

Under the maximum pay of $40 for a 55-foot railway post-office and over, the rate per mile run for the carriage of the car is 5.47 cents. It is estimated by the Department officials that 2½ tons of mail is the average carried in one of these traveling post-The lowest rate paid for a ton of mail, based on the proposed 10 per cent reduction, is 6.2 cents per mile, and for 21/2 tons at that rate it will amount to 15.6 cents for the average load. Add to this the 5.47 cents for the use of the railway postoffice and that will bring it up to 21 cents, or more than 9 cents above the cost of carriage as estimated by the railroads.

When the mail is carried in a storage car the weight is much more than 2½ tons, and it reaches 10, 12, and sometimes 20 tons and over. At 20 tons, which would be the average weight of mail in the storage cars on some of the heavy mail trains, the railroads would receive, at the lowest compensation of 6.2 cents per ton per mile, $1.24. No railway man will contend that these amounts do not yield a supplemental return to their passenger-train earnings above the cost of conducting and transportation. The railroads may claim that the price for this service should be made as if mail carriage was an independent service like freight and passenger. I contend that the mail service, except on exclusive mail trains, is but an adjunct to the passenger service and should be so regarded in arriving at the proper charge. When you consider the vast increase in the volume of mail in the last thirty years and that passenger rates in those sections of the country where the traffic is dense are being reduced and acquiesced in by the railroads, gentlemen will see that the proposed reduction can in no wise be considered as confiscatory, but as giving a fair return to the railroads and at the same time safeguarding the interests of the public.

It is estimated that the proposed reduction in the gross tonnage pay of 5 and 10 per cent, heretofore adverted to, will result in a cut of some $3,000,000, reducing the estimate of $47,660,000 to $44,660,000, and that the cut in the pay for the service on the railway mail post-offices is $993,000, resulting in a total reduction of nearly $4,000,000, or 7.4 per cent of the total amount for railway-mail pay.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. In this whole matter is any allowance whatever made for frequency of service?

Mr. STAFFORD. No allowance whatever is made for frequency of service. That has never been considered as an element of charge, the basis of pay being on the tonnage idea, and the only allowance for frequency of service is incidental on those heavy lines which have full railway post-office service, where the rallroads receive an additional allowance for every mile traveled by those cars. The more frequent the service on routes having such cars the added return is for the use of the car, irrespective of and additional to the weight carried.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. They get an allowance in the pay for railway postal cars?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but in many instances there is frequent service where the mail is carried in so-called "apartment cars," for which the railroads receive no additional compensation to the weight allowance.

It has been suggested that space used in the carriage of the mail would be a better determiner of mail pay than tonnage. This is a large question, which I will not enter upon at present, as the hour to consider the bill by paragraphs is almost arrived, but I will say, in response to the query of my friend from Connecticut, that if space was the determiner, compensa-tion for frequency of service would accordingly follow, as the space occupied would depend upon and correspond with frequency of train service. Under the space basis the railroads would receive compensation for the apartment-car service, for which, other than the tonnage pay, they receive no additional allowance.

If anything is certain in this mooted question of whether the railroads have been receiving too much for the carriage of the mails, it is that the excess charge has been on the heavy lines. To cut down the rate of pay on these large routes is the purpose of the proposed amendments.

Thirty years have passed since any reduction was made; the changed conditions fully justify the proposed cut. With reduced freight rates and reducing passenger rates, the House may safely, without danger of impairing the service, reduce the mail pay, with the belief that the proposed rates will be adequate for the service rendered. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk (proceeding with the reading of the bill) read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

For advertising, $5,000.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer at this time and to have pending the amendment which I send to the Clerk's I do that in order that the House may have notice that I intend to insist upon the amendment at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goebel] sends to the desk to have read for the information of the committee an amendment, and asks unanimous consent that it may be considered as pending.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, before I hear the amendment read, and therefore before I can be influenced by knowing what it is, I wish to object and insist that amendments be offered at their proper places in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and let the Clerk read the amendment in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word, and the amendment will be read in the gentleman's time for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 17, after the word "dollars," insert the following:
"Provided further, That in addition to the foregoing allowance there shall be allowed and paid to each employee in the respective grades a sum which, together with the allowance herein provided, would equal 20 per cent upon the salary now fixed by law.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 8, page 1, the words "five thousand" and insert the words "three thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN The continues from Missers of the salary of the salary from Missers of the salary of the salary

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

. In line 8 strike out "five thousand" and insert the words "three thousand five hundred."  $\ensuremath{\text{Theorem No.}}$

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know for what purpose this money is used, but I do know it is going the rounds of the newspapers that this is to be a billion-dollar Congress and I do know that it has not been necessary heretofore to appropriate more than $3,500 for advertising for the Postmaster-General. In this connection I want to call the attention of the House to the fact, and that is one reason why I offered the amendment, that while we have the most elaborate printing office, the largest printing office in the world, we find it neces sary to send out the Postal Guide to be printed under contract by J. B. Lyon Company, of Albany, N. Y. I do not know what it costs, but I do know that it could be set on a linotype in the Government Printing Office and remain there; in two or three days the necessary changes could be made and it could be printed each year in our own shop, with little expense.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, $3,500 the amount that has heretofore been appropriated for the Postmaster-General ought to be sufficient.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri had any information at all with reference to this item he would not have imposed upon the House for the time it has required to make his statement. This item is not the item from which the expenditure for the publication of the Postal Guide is taken, and therefore that shot of the gentleman went wide of the mark. Nor is he, apparently, familiar with the fact that the postal service grows from year to year. It does not stand still like some enterprises, and there is required each year some additional appropriation to cover the additional expenditure made necessary by that growth.

This particular item covers $884 for ocean mail service; $861 for supplies for the Post-Office Department and postal service; $417 for letter boxes, fasteners, and posts; $260 for improvements in patented devices for use in moving trains; $204 for facing slips; $152 for postal cards, and various other items covering the necessary publication of notice for various contracts that must be advertised for under the law. You can curtail this item, but if you do it does not admit of proper advertisement which Congress usually exacts in the dissemination of information in order to secure the widest possible competition. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries of post-office inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions, at $3,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,250 each; 15 inspectors, at $2,000 each; 10 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 130 inspectors, at $1,600 each; 110 inspectors, at $1,400 each; and 72 inspectors, at $1,200 each; in all, $599,150.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I will take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the debate upon this bill to submit some additional remarks upon the bill providing for a judicial review of fraud orders issued by the Postmaster-General, which passed the House some weeks ago. There seems to be some misunderstanding respecting the scope and purpose of that bill, based, as far as I am able to learn, upon a careless or willful misrepresentation of its provisions by individuals who seem to have little regard for the truth. It has come to be quite the fashion when any legislation is proposed that curtails or modifies power that is being exercised by a bureau officer in one of the Departments, however wise and just the measure may be, for some dilettante reformer who is long on theory and short on practical wisdom, and who has no faith in the common people nor respect for the integrity of the courts, to open up a tirade against the measure and to asperse the Representative who may propose it and all those who give it support.

have observed, also, that some of the chiefs of bureaus in the Departments stubbornly resist every attempt to reduce or modify the power they exercise or to reduce in any measure the appropriations for the administration of their bureaus. It is not always a question of patriotism or public good with them, but often a question of personal and official aggrandizement. Some bureau chiefs have gone so far in their opposition to just and prudent measures as to inspire unjust attacks upon Members advocating them and to recklessly, at least, misrepresent their purpose and effect. These officers seem to have no difficulty in securing means of communicating their opposition to the public. There are individuals engaged in newspaper and magazine work who are willing to believe anything that may be told them by a bureau chief in disparagement of the ability and integrity of a representative of the people, and without inquiry or investigation they send out broadcast over the country gross misstatements concerning the provisions and purposes of proposed legislation. Those individuals seem to be imbued with the idea that this is a government of the bureaus, by the bureaus, and for the bureaus, and that any proposition, however wise or salutary, that in any degree minimizes the dignity or power of a bureau chief must of necessity be against the public good. It is human nature for one who is in the enjoyment of autocratic authority to resist every attempt made to limit or modify the exercise of that authority.

The House has a most salutary rule that prohibits legislation upon general appropriation bills. The object of the rule is to prevent "riders" from being attached to appropriation bills and to secure the consideration of each measure independently upon its own merits.

Recently a newspaper correspondent, prompted by personal enmity or a general malicious instinct, assailed a Member of the House for making a point of order against an item of legislation that was contained in a general appropriation bill in violation of the rules of the House. The fact that the point of order was sustained and the action of the Member upheld by the presiding He wanted a officer made no difference to the correspondent. Intelligent and fair criticism of proposed legislation is of great good, but unjust and dishonest criticism is destructive of confidence in public men and even in government, and it does incalculable harm. Members of Congress must always be free to propose and support measures they honestly believe to be for the public good, and no Department officer should, under any circumstances, feel justified in misrepresenting measures or in imputing bad faith to Representatives who propose or support them.

THE FRAUD-ORDER LAW AND ITS ADMINISTRATION.

The criticism of the bill for a judicial review of fraud orders has been chiefly a misrepresentation and perversion of its provisions. Under the existing law the Postmaster-General may issue a fraud order against any person whom he believes is using the mails for criminal or fraudulent purposes, and the law provides for no notice to the person to be effected and no opportunity for him to appear and defend himself. A fraud order is an order issued by the Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, in the name of the Postmaster-General, to the postmaster where the accused receives his mail, directing him to pay no money orders to the accused and to deliver no mail to him, but to stamp all mail that comes to him with the word "fraudulent" and return it to the writer where the envelope bears a return card; otherwise to forward it immediately to the Post-Office Department, to be disposed of through the deadletter office. The order covers all mail, business or social, without discrimination. In many and perhaps in most instances, as a matter of favor, the Department notifies the person to be effected by a fraud order and gives him an opportunity to appear and show cause, if he can, why the order should not be issued. The hearing is voluntary, and is conducted by the Assistant Attorney-General, who is bound by no rules and follows no fixed course of procedure. In some cases no notice is given at all. The law does not require it, and the Assistant Attorney-General decides when notice shall be given and when not. In numerous instances fraud orders have been issued upon the mere confidential report of a post-office inspector, without any notice whatever to the person affected or any opportunity to disprove the charges against him.

CHARACTER OF EVIDENCE UPON WHICH FRAUD ORDERS ARE ISSUED.

Now, I want to say a few words in regard to the evidence upon which the Assistant Attorney-General acts in issuing fraud orders. I stated a moment ago that his action was based, in the main, upon confidential reports which were the result of secret investigations by post-office inspectors. They constitute the bulk of the evidence. The Assistant Attorney-General for the Department is himself first convinced, and then he notifies the person affected by the proposed action to appear and show cause, without allowing him to see the report or know what it contains. He is at once the prosecuting attorney, judge, and executioner, and the privilege of appearing before that officer, who has already made up his mind, to refute evidence that he can know nothing about is one without any practical value.

The Supreme Court has held that the fraud-order power may be conferred upon the Postmaster-General because the right to the mail is a privilege and not a vested right and that the proceeding is not criminal in its character. While this may be the correct constitutional theory, yet the party against whom a fraud order is issued is branded as a criminal and stigmatized as a perpetrator of fraud. It makes him an outlaw as far as one of the most important branches of the Government is concerned. The issuance of such an order covers all his mail and deprives him of the right to communicate with his friends, his wife, or his mother, or to receive any communication from them by means of the mails.

All of this is done upon confidential reports, the result of secret investigations based upon ex parte statements of persons whose motives can not be known, who may be responsible or who may be irresponsible, who may not be competent witnesses, and who are not sworn and do not carry the responsibilities of Their names and identity are not disclosed, ordinary witnesses. and their evidence does not contain one single safeguard against fraud or one single test of credibility. Such evidence would not be received in the humblest magistrate's court of the country in a case involving the investigation of the most inconsequential right of person or property.

The confidential nature of the reports and the statements they contain, including the names of persons giving information, is such that they are never made public or disclosed to the parties vitally affected by them. About a year ago this House adopted a resolution requesting the Postmaster-General to furnish it with the facts upon which a certain fraud order was issued and copies of the inspector's reports in the case, and that officer politely and respectfully returned the resolution to the House with the statement that it would not be compatible with the public interest to comply with the request.

The investigation and decision of fraud-order cases under the practice in the Department is necessarily made by the Assistant Attorney-General. During the two years ending June 30 last, 660 fraud orders were issued and a number of cases investigated where the accused agreed to modify his advertising matter so that it would conform to the ideas of propriety of the Assistant Attorney-General, thereby obviating the issuing of an order excluding him from the mails. Over one case a day had to be examined and decided, and it would be out of the question for the Postmaster-General to give his personal atten-tion to the examination and decision of these cases and attend to the other arduous and multitudinous duties of his office. The Assistant Attorney-General devotes the bulk of his time to the fraud-order business. He refers complaints to post-office inspectors, examines reports, decides questions of law and fact, hears matter in defense, and practically has the decision of the ultimate question as to whether a fraud order shall be issued or not, although the work is done in the name of the Postmaster-General. It is a matter of common experience that men who represent the Government in hunting down and ferreting out fraud and in conducting prosecutions become imbued with an official prejudice to such an extent as to unfit them to deal justly between their own client and paymaster and one whose interests may be adverse. I do not say this in disparagement of this class of officials, for a man who has the zeal and enthusiasm necessary to make a success of the work in which he is engaged, unless he be exceptionally even tempered and well poised, is most apt to become inoculated with that official bias that will prevent his dealing justly with those whose interests he may have in charge.

THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL IS PROSECUTOR, JUDGE, AND EXECUTIONER.

The Assistant Attorney-General is a detective, in a large sense, to hunt down frauds, and is the prosecutor to convict the perpetrators, and in the fraud-order practice he is the judge and jury to pass upon their guilt or innocence. In view of the vital questions that are involved directly and impliedly in the fraudorder practice, it is a most unsafe thing to intrust an officer of this kind with such unlimited power. This Government is said to be a Government of law and not of men. The personal and property rights of citizens should not be vitally affected by any department of government, excepting in pursuance of law. the execution of the fraud-order law much may depend upon the temperament and the ideals of the Assistant Attorney-General. One person occupying that position may have peculiarly high notions of business ethics and little or no patience with those who do not deal absolutely fairly with their fellows. On the other hand, another may have lax ideas respecting these matters and much sympathy for wrongdoers. Under a practice where the result must of necessity be largely colored by the temperament and sentiment of a departmental official, the vital concerns of the citizens ought not to be reposed without the right to appeal to the courts.

I desire to impress upon the House, in addition, the dangerous character of the method of presenting proof on the part of the Government in fraud-order cases. The same zeal that I have referred to in connection with the Assistant Attorney-General characterizes the action of post-office inspectors. There seems to be a belief or feeling on the part of these functionaries that unless they are able to discover official irregularities or individual delinquencies in connection with the mails their records as efficient officers will suffer. Their investigations are made secretly and contain, largely, interviews with citizens in various communities which are always private, and the names of the citizens who give information are to be kept inviolate.

How many men, prompted by feelings of envy or jealousy against a business rival, with the understanding that their names will not be disclosed under any circumstances, will be prompted to give information that may be largely colored by their feelings or interests—information that as citizens, carrying the responsibilities of a witness in public, they would under no circumstances feel at liberty to give. Such testimony is a positive menace to the safety of person, reputation, and property under any system of administration. It is contrary to the commonest notions of justice and fair dealing. Due process of law, as is commonly understood in our system of Government, means that process of law that is administered in the open, where the accused party may have a right to confront his accusers; where those who give testimony on either side must carry the solemn responsibilities of their conduct before the public.

ALL EVIDENCE SHOULD BE OPEN TO INSPECTION.

I have no sympathy with or respect for the policy that affects the important rights of person, reputation, or property by means of confidential reports of secret emissaries of the law. Reports containing evidence respecting the rights of the citizen should always be made public. No consideration of delicacy or embarrassment should justify the Government in blasting the reputation and ruining the business of a citizen without giving him an opportunity to know exactly who has testified against him and to what he has testified. The reports of inspectors under any practice should be open to the person who may be affected by the fraud order. He should be allowed to know who have given information or testified against him, and citizens who are interviewed should understand that their names and statements would be open to inspection by the person against whom they testify or give information. This would have a most wholesome and salutary influence. Men would see that the statements that were written up by the post-office inspectors and credited to them were fair and just and absolutely true. There should be no inducement or opportunity for men to attempt to stab the business or reputation of rivals in the dark.

Even under the present law the investigation of fraud-order questions should be conducted in as open a manner as possible. Star-chamber procedure has no place in the administration of rights in this Government. It is contrary to the spirit of the age. The whole fraud-order practice in the Post-Office Department, however honest and pure the intentions and purposes of its administrators may be, is out of harmony with the principles of individual liberty. It is claimed, I know, that if reports were made public and the names of men who give information were disclosed, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for post-office inspectors to secure necessary information in this class of cases. I make the assertion that a citizen who will not give testimony except upon condition that his name be withheld from the public, and particularly from the individual against whom he testifies, as a rule is not worthy of credence. His testimony is to be suspected and should not be regarded as sufficient to deprive any person of any substantial right.

CRIMINAL LAWS BEST DETERRENT OF CRIME.

The Federal criminal code imposes penalties for almost every act that would justify the issuing of a fraud order. If post-office inspectors in investigating crimes and frauds would investigate them with a view of detecting the perpetrators, and their reports be immediately transmitted to the Department of Justice, where instructions could be sent to arrest the criminals, it would do more than anything else could do to stop the practice of debauching the mails. The Postmaster-General in his recent report claims that under the fraud-order practice lotteries and other criminal concerns have almost been driven out of existence. In my humble judgment, if there were no penalty excepting that of a fraud order, the country would be overrun with lotteries, "green-goods" institutions, and other criminal concerns to-day. The criminal courts have suppressed lotteries and "green-goods" dispensers. They have been the efficient power in purifying the mails and protecting them against the schemes and devices of evil doers.

The only deterrent effect of a fraud order is to take from the swindler a portion of the proceeds of his wrongful practices. It takes some time to discover the fact that a person is prostituting the mails, and he may swindle the public out of thousands of dollars before he is discovered. All that he so receives is clear gain. A fraud order prevents him from receiving any additional fruits of his crime. He may go to another place and assume another name and continue his dishonest scheme until he is again discovered. A law that would simply compel a horse thief to return stolen horses he might have in his possession to the rightful owner and then go on his way, would be very poor protection against horse stealing. Yet this is the theory and effect of the fraud-order law. The penitentiary is what deters and terrorizes criminals. Fraud orders protect some people from imposition and crime, but they have little or no terrors for the criminal.

In making these criticisms of the fraud-order practice, it is not my intention to reflect in any degree upon the Postmaster-General, the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, or any other official. The result is the necessary and logical outcome of the arbitrary system of investigation authorized by the statutes. It is not the fault of the officers authorized by the statutes. It is not the fault of the officers personally, but the fault of the system, and it is the system that I am complaining about and which I believe ought to be materially modified.

A number of years ago it was the practice in the administration of the pension laws to have special agents make secret examinations of pension claims, with a view of detecting frauds, and thousands of veterans of the civil war were dropped from the pension rolls upon confidential reports without notice, without having been given an opportunity to present their defense, and the sense of justice of the entire country was so aroused that Congress quickly passed a law providing that in all investigations of pension claims by special examiners the applicant should have notice before a single witness was examined and allowed to be present and cross-examine the witnesses and have an opportunity to submit testimony in his own behalf, and that he should at all times have access to the reports of the special examiners. Under the law now, a veteran who is drawing a pension of only $6 a month can not be deprived of that token of his country's gratitude upon confidential reports of special agents. He can not be deprived of it except by notice, with an opportunity to confront the witnesses who testify against him and with an opportunity to submit evidence on his own part, and the whole proceeding must be conducted publicly and in the open, while under the fraud-order practice the reputation of an individual may be blasted, his business destroyed, he may be branded as a perpetrator of crime and a common outlaw on confidential reports of secret emissaries, without the privilege of knowing what is contained in the reports or who has given information against him or what the character of that information may be.

The principle would be the same if a grand jury, with its secrecy and its confidences, should hear evidence and indict a citizen for a crime, and then he should be arraigned before the same grand jury to plead to the merits of the case, and the jury should notify him by the indictment of the general nature of the charge, and say to him:

The evidence on behalf of the State has already been introduced. It is confidential and secret, and will not be disclosed to you. You have the high privilege of proving yourself innocent if you are able to do it.

In fact the situation is worse, because witnesses before a grand jury testify under the sanction of an oath and are liable to prosecution for perjury. In some instances they may be liable in the civil courts for damages for malicious prosecution. Yet a witness who is interviewed by a post-office inspector regarding the character and conduct of a citizen or his business carries with him absolutely no kind of responsibility in the criminal courts for perjury and no kind of responsibility for malicious prosecution, slander, defamation of character, or anything of that sort.

FRAUD ORDERS NOT OPEN TO REVIEW BY COURTS.

Fraud orders are not subject to review in the courts in so far as questions of fact are involved. That is to say, no court can determine in any proceeding whether the facts charged against the accused are true or false; whether the evidence against him is credible or otherwise; whether it carries conviction or The courts do have power to review questions of lawthat is, questions respecting the jurisdiction of the Postmaster-General to act at all in the particular case. The courts may inquire into facts so far as it is necessary to determine whether the particular transaction or business on which the fraud order is based comes within the statute and therefore within the jurisdiction of the Postmaster-General. If the court finds that the case comes within the jurisdiction of the Postmaster-General, that is the end of it, regardless of whether the questions of fact were decided right or wrong, and upon that question the accused is utterly helpless. He is wholly without a remedy.

It is asserted that courts already have the right to review the facts as well as the law in fraud-order decisions, but that assertion is made by no one familiar with the law. It has been repeatedly decided by the courts that where Congress vests a discretionary power in a Department officer the exercise of that power can not be controlled, modified, or reviewed by the courts unless the law expressly authorizes it. There is not a decision of any Federal court to the contrary. The reports of the courts There is not a decision abound in decisions uniformly denying the right to investigate questions of fact involved in the decision of a question reposed in an administrative or executive officer. In the case of Bates & Guild Co. v. Payne (194 U. S., 106), in deciding a question exactly identical in principle with the fraud-order power, the court said:

When the decision of questions of fact is committed by Congress to the judgment and discretion of the head of a Department his decision thereon is conclusive.

In a case decided by the United States circuit court for the State of Missouri in July, 1905, involving the power of the court to review questions of fact in fraud-order cases, the court reviewed all of the decisions upon the subject and held that the courts had no such authority. It was said in the course of the opinion:

The proposition conceded by all, that if the Postmaster-General committed an error of law this court should enjoin the enforcement of the fraud order, is made the basis of an attack thereon by complainant's counsel. It is urged that if the evidence on which the fraud order was issued was meager or lacking, then the Postmaster-General committed an error of law. There is no authority to sustain the contention in any of the reported cases. To sustain such a contention would be equivalent to a writ of error from this court to review the decisions of that officer on the ground that his findings are not supported by the evidence. But he did have evidence before him. That evidence may or may not have been legal evidence according to the standard of the text-books. It may have been hearsay; it may have been secondary; it may have been delivered by an incompetent witness; or it may have been such as the courts would receive. But whatever it was, it was evidence satisfactory to him. evidence satisfactory to him.

The Postmaster-General had, under the power with which he is clothed, the right to investigate the subject-matter. It was his right and duty to ascertain whether the methods of the bank were to further a scheme by the use of the mails to obtain money by fraudulent means. His findings of fact were that such practices were carried on. He had the power to act. He committed no error of law, and his findings of fact are not open to inquiry by the courts.

In that case a fraud order had been issued by the Postmaster-General, and the party against whom it was issued brought suit to have it enjoined, and insisted upon the right to introduce evidence to prove his innocence of the charges made against him, but the court held that the Department had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and that the court could not hear evidence as to whether the charges were true or false, and the suit was dis-While the fraud-order statute confers a very broad power upon the Postmaster-General, I have no disposition to curtail that power in any way that would prevent the Post-master-General from using it for the protection of the people against fraud and imposition through the mails. The mails are peculiarly adapted to fraudulent uses, and for that reason I believe it is entirely proper to vest in the Postmaster-General a summary power to prevent the use of the mails by evil doers for improper purposes, but I also believe that a citizen whose right to the mails has been denied upon charges that destroy his reputation and ruin his business should be allowed to prove his innocence of the charges made against him in a court where justice is administered according to established procedure if he is able to do so. No question affecting the right of property or person can be determined, however inconsequential it may be, without a trial in a court under sanction of law. object of the pending bill is to secure to the Department the right to protect the public against the prostitution of the mails by swindlers and criminals, and at the same time secure to those who honestly believe their rights have been unjustly denied them the privilege of going into court and having the law and facts investigated and their guilt or innocence determined by. legal evidence according to established procedure. Public opinion condemns lynching, not so much because the victim does not deserve death, but because of the universal instinct that every citizen is entitled to his day in court, be he guilty or innocent.

EXPANSION OF FRAUD-ORDER POWERS.

If the fraud-order law were now administered according to its original purpose and intention, I would be the last man to raise my voice against it, arbitrary and despotic though it seems. I have no use for criminals and swindlers who seek to debauch the mails for unlawful purposes, but where men who honestly believe they are innocent of violations of law are denied the right of the mails and branded with infamy I believe they should be accorded the privilege of going into court and proving their innocence if they can.

The fraud-order law was originally intended to enable the Postmaster-General to withhold mails from the promoters of lotteries, "green-goods" institutions, get-rich-quick concerns, and fly-by-night affairs that were essentially and palpably fraudulent and criminal. It was not intended that it should interfere with old established business institutions that could be reached through the civil and criminal courts, but during the last two or three years a surveillance has been instituted over old establishments using the mails in a mail-order business, and numerous concerns of that kind have been brought before the Assistant Attorney-General and subjected to all manner of embarrassment and humiliation, and in some instances fraud orders have been issued against them and their business and reputations forever It is the ambitious policy of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Department in the fraud-order line during the last few years that has subjected this salutary power to the criticism that it is receiving all over the country at this time.

HAS THE FRAUD-ORDER POWER BEEN ABUSED?

But we are told that no abuses have arisen under the fraudorder law, and therefore there is no need of legislation modifying it. It, in the first place, vests a tremendous discretion in the Post-Office Department, a discretion that is greatly liable to be abused. It affords a dangerous opportunity for fraud and corruption. It has only been three or four years since the law officer of that Department was indicted for corruptly receiving money for withholding fraud orders against guilty persons.

But who knows how often the power has been abused? know that in a number of cases during the last six years fraud orders were issued by the Department, and in a few weeks thereafter they were rescinded because they were wrongfully issued in the first instance. I have in mind one case where an order was issued upon the report of a post-office inspector, and, after it had done its deadly work and ruined a legitimate business and blackened the reputation of those conducting it, the Assistant Attorney-General reexamined the case and decided that there had never been any just ground for issuing the order, and he revoked it. This was several years ago. In his letter to the attorney of the victim informing him of the revocation of the order the Assistant Attorney-General said:

I have carefully examined the evidence adduced by your client, and I am fully satisfied that the "fraud" order, dated the 30th day of August last, against the Security Building Loan Mortgage Company and its officers was improvidently issued. I can not find from the evidence that that company or its officers, or any of them, have been engaged in a scheme to defraud the public or to obtain money by false pretenses, and hence the order has been revoked.

It was some consolation that the order was finally revoked, but that was a very inadequate reparation for such a grievous wrong. That letter is on the official files in the Department. Who knows how many other cases of that kind there may be?

I also know of a number of old and substantial institutions, institutions that are financially responsible, that have been brought to Washington on a fraud-order notice, compelled to employ attorneys, and subjected to much trouble and expense in order to prevent fraud orders from being issued against them. Others of that character have been compelled to submit to the humiliation of having the Assistant Attorney-General edit their advertising matter for them and make it conform to his notion of advertising ethics. I know that according to well-recognized principles of justice, wherever a substantial right of a citizen is taken from him without an opportunity to be heard, whether he he guilty or innegent a wrong has been committed.

he be guilty or innocent, a wrong has been committed.

There was one case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States where a fraud order issued by the Post-Office Department was held to have been wrongfully issued. That was the case of the American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty (187 U. S., 94). The plaintiff in that case was engaged in the treatment of diseases by mental action. The Postmaster-General decided that any person or association that advertised the treatment of human diseases by mental action was a perpetrator of a fraud, and therefore issued a fraud order against that company. The company commenced suit to enjoin the order, and the case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the court held the fraud order was unlawfully issued, that the business of the company was not covered by the fraud-order statute. The opinion is a severe rebuke to the Department.

It is said that in upward of thirty cases where individuals against whom fraud orders have been issued sought relief in the courts the decision of the Department has been upheld. But what does that signify? In almost every case the court decided that it had no authority to determine whether the charges were true or false. None of those cases were decided upon its merits. In every case the court refused to investigate the facts, except to ascertain whether the Postmaster-General had jurisdiction. How many of those cases would have been decided otherwise if the law had authorized the courts to investigate their merits and decide whether the accused was really guilty or innocent? It is of no benefit to go into court and be told that the court is powerless to investigate and decide the case upon its merits.

THE PROPOSED MEASURE CARRIES NO COMFORT TO SWINDLERS. In view of this record and the grave danger of the abuse of such an arbitrary power as that contained in the fraud-order statute, is there a fair-minded man in all this country who would oppose a law that would leave with the Postmaster-General sufficient authority to amply protect the mails against criminals and swindlers and at the same time give to those against whom fraud orders are issued, who honestly believe they are innocent of offense against the laws, an opportunity to go into court and prove their innocence? That is exactly the question at issue. The proposed measure does not make fraud easy, as some of its critics have declared, but it makes wrong and injustice difficult, if not impossible. No man is infallible. Even the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, who investigates and decides more than one case a day, may make a mistake occasionally.

The proposed legislation provides that when the Postmaster-General decides to issue a fraud order he shall make a record of it and cause a copy of the order to be served upon the person to be affected by it, and the order shall not be final until fifteen days after service or a return of "not found," but the moment the order is decided upon the Postmaster-General may stop the payment of postal money orders and the delivery of mail to the accused as effectually as if the order was absolute in the first instance. During the fifteen days the person affected by the proceeding may, upon the filing of a sufficient bond for the payment of costs and as a guaranty of good faith, commence suit in the United States district court in the district in which his post-office is located to have the fraud order proceeding reviewed both as to the law and the facts, and have the question of his guilt or innocence decided by the court upon legal evidence. If no proceeding shall be commenced within the fifteen days the fraud order becomes final and the accumulated mail and all other mail will be disposed of as it is disposed of under the present practice. If suit should be brought and it could not be determined within the fifteen days, upon filing a bond in the sum of $10,000 to cover all cost and damages, the court may order the further postponement of the fraud order until the suit is determined, but in the meantime the accused can not receive a single item of mail until the case is disposed of and he has proven his right to it. The power to impound the mail in the delivery post-office from the moment the Department decides that a fraud order ought to be issued, and keep it impounded in case of a suit in court until the suit is finally disposed of, is as complete and perfect protection of the public as is afforded by the existing law.

is afforded by the existing law.

The bill authorizes the court to make such orders for the disposition of the mail pending the suit as the interests of justice may require. This provision is intended to give the court authority, where there is a large accumulation of mail, to appoint some responsible person to take charge of it and explain the situation to correspondents and hold money orders and valuables to be returned to the sender if the decision should be against the complainant. The bill gives no possible comfort to criminals and swindlers, and in no respect promotes the per-petration of fraud. It does not interfere with a single preventive power that the Postmaster-General has now. The Postmaster-General may go on and have cases investigated by inspectors and decide them upon confidential reports, with or without notice or hearing, just as he does now, and issue orders peremptorily withholding the privilege of the mails from those whom he believes to be using them for unlawful purposes, as effectually as he can under the present practice. The right to go into court for a review of fraud orders would not arrest or suspend in any measure or degree the power the Postmaster-General has to shut off the mails on account of fraud, and the accused can not receive a single item of mail or collect a single money order until the case has been finally tried, and then only if he has clearly proved his innocence. The bill does not provide for a long and tedious trial by a jury, as some of its uninformed critics have claimed. It provides for a "summary" trial, and that means a speedy trial. Every lawyer knows that a summary proceeding or suit can not permit a jury trial. The Department can not be embarrassed and subjected to unnecessary delays.

DOES NOT TEND TO PROMOTE UNMERITORIOUS LITIGATION.

Neither does the bill tend to encourage vexatious or unmeritorious litigation. A person who is using the mails for criminal or fraudulent purposes knows of his own guilt and he would not commence proceedings in court to review a fraud order. There would be no inducement for him to do so. What could he gain by it? He would be compelled to put up a bond and employ an attorney and to pay the costs of the litigation if he should fail, and he would not be permitted to receive any mail whatever until the case was finally disposed of. I repeat, any person who is using the mails for criminal or fraudulent purposes would never go into court under the provisions of the bill, because there would be absolutely nothing to be obtained by him. If he could commence proceedings and arrest the opera-tion of the fraud order and in the meantime receive his mail there might be some object for him to do so, but the bill provides that the moment the Postmaster-General decides to issue the fraud order the mail shall be held up and shall be impounded all of the time until the case is finally decided, and if it is decided against the complainant he could not get a single item of No person would be prompted to go into court to resist a fraud order except one who honestly believed his rights had been unjustly denied him, and who will say that such an individual ought not to have that privilege? Furthermore, the swindler would be liable to criminal prosecution for fraudulently using the mails.

It is likely that four out of every five fraud orders are rightly issued and in none of those cases would there be any litigation. In the other one-fifth there ought to be a right to a hearing in court and a decision on the real merits of the case, if the person affected desired it. The courts are created for the purpose of determining controversies, and they are the chief safeguard of liberty and property. No man can be deprived of a right of the value of $5 in any State in the Union unless it be by due process of law, and that means by proceedings in court, where the witnesses testify in the open, where they can be cross-examined, where they are put under oath and are responsible for what they say, and yet it is insisted that in a proceeding that brands a citizen with infamy, that stigmatizes him as a criminal, that outlaws him and denies him the ordinary privilege of communicating with his wife or his dearest friend, he may be denied all the rights that experience has found necessary for the protection of person and property.

WHERE SUIT MAY BE COMMENCED.

The bill provides that suits shall be brought in the district in which the post-office is located at which the complainant has been receiving his mail. It is the policy of the Government to provide for the trial of cases at the place most convenient for the parties and witnesses, and the policy is a wise one. Under the fraud-order practice every hearing is held at the Post-Office Department in the city of Washington. A citizen of California, for instance, who is notified to show cause why a fraud order should not be issued against him is required to bring his attorney and his witnesses clear across the continent, 3,000 miles or more, and make his defense before an officer who follows no rules and is bound by no kind of procedure. He may decide the case arbitrarily, in so far as questions of fact are concerned, and his decision can not be reached in any

In the States every citizen has the right to be tried in the county in which he resides. In the Federal Government every suit must be tried in the judicial district in which the controversy arises or where the defendant lives, and yet in the fraudorder practice every single hearing is conducted in the Post-office Department in the city of Washington.

I challenge anyone to point out in the proposed legislation a single provision that would permit any person accused of misusing the mails to gain any advantage whatever until he has proved by legal evidence in a court of justice his entire innocence of the charges made against him. The proceeding in court does not subject the Government to any undue and unnecessary trouble or embarrassment. It is as much the duty of the Government to protect the innocent in the enjoyment of their rights as it is to punish the guilty. If a man is guilty of misconduct the Government would have no difficulty in securing evidence to prove it. Testimony could be taken by deposition, and there are now over three hundred and sixty post-office inspectors traveling about over the country investigating the postal service and also quietly and secretly investigating the character of business of men who patronize the mails. The character of business of men who patronize the mails. same detective service, the same spy system that gives the Postmaster-General information in the first place would furnish all the evidence that could be gotten to sustain fraud orders in the courts.

THE CASE OF THE PEOPLE'S BANK OF ST. LOUIS.

The chief argument against the bill is that one E. G. Lewis, of St. Louis, Mo., who was connected with the People's Bank at that place, against which a fraud order was issued in 1905, is advocating its enactment. That is a high ground of opposiis advocating its electrical. That is a high ground of opposi-tion, indeed. It seems to me that the bill should be considered and disposed of on its merits, without regard to who may be for it or who may be against it. The question is, Should the bill be enacted into law upon its own merits? I know nothing about the details of the People's Bank case. I do know, in a general way, that officers of the bank had sold over $2,000,000 of its stock to people throughout the country, and it had several hundred thousand dollars of deposits. In June, 1905, a fraud order was issued against the bank and its officers, which completely wrecked its business. The fraud order was issued upon confidential reports of post-office inspectors based upon secret investigations. The officers of the bank were not allowed to see or inspect the reports, and they do not know and probably never will know what evidence they contained. A receiver was appointed for the bank by a State court in St. Louis, and its affairs, settled through the expensive and wasteful process of a receivership, showed over $2,000,000 of net assets. Every debt due the bank was collected, every loan was well secured, and every depositor was paid in full, and the stockholders have been paid about 90 per cent of the face value of their stock, and there are assets vet remaining. An appeal was taken to the supreme court of the State of Missouri from the order of the local court appointing the receiver, and that order was reversed on the ground that no reason was shown that would justify the appointment of a receiver. The State supreme court ordered the management of the bank put back in the control of its officers, but the fraud order still stands, and, of course, the business of the bank is ruined.

It may be that the bank was doing a fraudulent business: I do not know. But I do know that directly after the fraud order was issued the officers of the bank brought suit in the United States circuit court in the eastern district of Missouri to enjoin the fraud order, on the ground that the business of the bank was not fraudulent or unlawful, and they asked the privilege of being permitted to prove by legal evidence in a public trial its entire innocence of fraud or wrongdoing. The Post-Office Department interposed through the United States district attorney and resisted the application, and the court decided that it had no power to inquire into the guilt or innocence of the bank or its officers; that that question had been decided by the Post-Office Department in the fraud-order proceeding, and whether that decision was right or wrong, whether it was based upon sufficient evidence or not, whether the evidence was given by competent or incompetent witnesses, the decision must stand as final, and no court had any power to review or inquire into it, and the suit was dismissed. I say, it may be that the bank was doing a fraudulent business, but the feeling is instinctive that its officers should have been given the right to show their innocence in a public trial if they were able to do so. numerous cases of that kind scattered throughout the country.

The proposed measure was introduced in the House on the 12th of January, 1906, and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department had notice of the bill, and he appeared personally at two meetings of the committee and made oral arguments against it, and he also submitted a written argument against the bill. That committee, composed of eighteen of the ablest lawyers of the House, carefully and exhaustively examined the bill, and by a unanimous vote ordered it reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass. The bill was reported on the 12th of June, 1906, and remained on the Calendar until the 7th day of January, 1907, when it was taken up in regular order and thoroughly discussed and passed. Sixteen members of the House participated in the discussion, and every Member who desired had an opportunity to speak upon it. The bill passed the House without amendment by practically a unanimous vote. There were not five votes against the bill on its final passage.

I introduced and urged the passage of the bill because I thought it was right. I am firmly of the conviction that it is a just and meritorious measure, and I have no doubt that it, or some other bill embodying its principal features, will become a law in the near future.

I will print with this speech a copy of the bill as it passed the House.

An act to provide for a judicial review of orders excluding persons from the use of United States mail facilities.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this is one of the paragraphs that includes increases of salaries?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It does not.

While I am on my feet, then may I fur-Mr. LITTLEFIELD. ther inquire of the chairman upon what basis the salaries that are increased have been increased? I have been looking the report over, and while I find an explanation of the manner in which the increases are made I do not find any statement of the reasons why they are made. I get an aggregate increase of Will the chairman be kind enough to state now, if he can, for what reason the committee made the increases and on the basis of what investigation?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In answer to a very strong public demand, evidenced by the pressure in this House, and because we believe the proposed increases are justified.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understand that is without reference to any investigation as to whether they are entitled thereto or not. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, there was an investigation, not by a summoning of witnesses, but by conversations with the officials of the Department as to the number of resignations on account of lack of compensation and the general difficulty in getting employees to continue in the service or to accept service on account of existing salaries.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that I learn the Keep commission have made a very extensive investigation of the whole question of salaries, and the sworn testimony before the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, a committee heretofore moribund, shows that all Government clerks drawing $1,400 and under are now receiving from 20 to 30 per cent more than men rendering similar service in private employment.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Does not that apply entirely to the departmental service?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It applies to all Departments.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I said departmental serve.
I do not understand that the Keep commission made any Investigation into the employees of the post-offices throughout the country, but its investigation was limited to the departmental service.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To be entirely frank with the gentleman, I did not examine them as to that point, but Mr. Galloway and Mr. Pinchot both testified before my committee, and both testified that they had spent anywhere from eighteen months to two years and more in a very careful investigation of this whole question of salaries. I did not examine them in reference specifically to the Post-Office Department, but that statement was general that the salaries from $1,400 down are, after careful investigation and examination, from 20 to 25 per cent in excess of the salaries of men performing similar service in private life.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Our view was quite to the contrary, so far as it related to employees in the postal service. We made no investigation of the departmental service.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You mean the distinct departmental service here in Washington?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes, sir.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, they have given a list of over 62,000 employees as to which this condition applies. I have not the aggregate, I am having it made—
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Is this the same Mr. Pin-chot to whom you refer the one who has just had his salary raised?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And he did not make any comment about salaries above $1,400?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not think that is a fair criticism. He was testifying before my committee on oath, and that suggestion does not impair the value of his testimony.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman does not want to be understood he was not on oath when his own salary was under consideration?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not understand that he made an application for the increase of his own salary. I do not know anything about that matter, but I want to say to the gentle-man further that the Keep Commission investigated the whole question, and Mr. Pinchot and Mr. Galloway simply testified before my committee as to the facts they ascertained. What I wanted to know was whether this committee had made any investigation of the facts for the purpose of determining whether or not these employees were being paid more than other persons doing similar work for private parties. may be allowed to say perhaps that the fact that Mr. Pinchot's salary was increased in the Senate the other day does not necessarily affect that proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I quite agree with that proposition.
Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that we can properly take up when that item is under consideration.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of finding out what part of the bill it is in, so that if I am here I can make the inquiry.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It begins on page 5.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call attention of the committee to the necessity at times for the exercise of the right to issue fraud orders. I hold in my hand a letter written by a man who calls him-self the "registration agent of the Flathead Indian Reservawhich he writes to various old soldiers in the country wanting to register them for the Flathead opening. I will not advertise him by name, nor even state the locality in which he lives, but I will read from his letter for the benefit of the committee, because a great many Members are receiving these letters from old soldiers in their districts, wanting to know whether they ought to send this man $15 or not. Occasionally these letters come to the Members of the House with a $15 check inclosed, and Members come to me and ask whether it was a good thing for his constituent to forward $15 to the gentlemen in question. The letter states

If you will write me what company and regiment you served in, when enlisted, and when discharged, I can prepare the papers necessary to register you for a 160-acre farm at the Flathead land opening.

You understand that your agent will be a responsible person, residing near the reservation, and that he will act for you only and can not represent any other soldier. The law prohibits an agent from acting for more than one soldier.

To make sure of getting registered, it is best to reserve an agent as soon as possible, as I must reject all applications after my agents are taken. I have been forced to do this at former openings.

My fee for furnishing an agent and having all necessary papers prepared is $15. This covers the entire cost of registration.

I inclose one of my application blanks, and will be glad to answer any other questions you may desire to ask.

As a matter of fact, the Flathead Reservation survey has not been completed. The allotments have not all yet been made. The President is authorized to make and proclaim the regulations as to the method of this opening. He may take the same method he adopted as to the Wind River Reservation and as to the Crow Reservation, and he may not. The law does not re-quire anything of this kind, a different plan may be proclaimed. and here is a gentleman now collecting $15 in advance, possibly a year in advance of any opening at all, on the statement that this is "a matter of law," and that he can give them some special and peculiar advantage by reason of his employing him early so as to get in on the ground floor, as it were, with this gentleman who is engaged in the registration business.

This, on the face of it, is obtaining money for something that may or may not be useful. The chances are that it will not be useful. It is a very easy thing to get a list of old soldiers from the pension rolls of the different pension agencies, and then a letter like this, sent to each one of them, appealing to his cupidity, and telling him that he can get a quarter section of land for $15, is a very strong inducement to the party named. And I can see where the two or three gentlemen in different localities, who are working this scheme, may accumulate a very large fund, and therefore dispose of a considerable portion of the money we have just appropriated under the pension laws. It is an industry that I think ought to be broken up, and any Member of this House who receives circulars of this kind, I think, ought to be informed of the propriety of any one endeavoring to collect money from old soldiers this long in advance of any actual opening, without any notice whatever of what the terms of the opening will be

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is not there a statute that makes it criminal for anyone to make use of the mails for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretenses, and would not that individual be subject to criminal prosecution if he is using the mails for that purpose, and has the gentleman notified the Department of Justice of this instance of gross abuse of the mailing privileges?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether the Department of Justice are not waiting to know whether the Crumpacker bill will pass or not?

Mr. LACEY. The question is whether we ought to encourage this sort of thing or not—I am addressing the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]—because I do not think that it should be permitted.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that everybody believes in discouraging such things and everybody believes in prosecuting fraud and crime in the courts in the usual and ordinary manner, and using likewise the power the Postmaster-General has in a proper way to protect the public against impositions of that I am as firmly a believer in the policy as the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa

[Mr. LACEY] has expired. The Clerk read as follows:

For traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem allowance, inspectors in charge, and the chief post-office inspector, and expenses other than livery hire incurred by inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, $25,000.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against line 7, after "inspectors in charge," and against the words "and the chief post-office inspector."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that is the law now. It is not contrary to existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy] on the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I claim that it is new legislation or general legislation on the appropriation bill here. It did not appear in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, yes; it did.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee states to the Chair that it is existing law. Can the gentleman controvert that statement? If not, the Chair overrules the point of

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 8, page 3, by striking out the words "other than livery hire."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For livery hire incurred by inspectors not covered by their per dlem allowance in connection with the installation and inspection of rural routes, $60,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman explain why it was that he struck out the words "livery hire" in the last paragraph and leaves the same thing in this paragraph?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This paragraph applies entirely to the livery hire incurred by rural delivery inspectors in the installation of the rural delivery service. If we had continued "other than livery hire" in the preceding paragraph, it would have prohibited any part of the appropriation being would have prohibited any part of that appropriation being used by the inspectors for any portion of their livery hire when engaged in the discharge of their duties which required that character of expense.

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars, robbers, and highway mail robbers, $20,000: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated not to exceed $2,000 may be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of securing information concerning violations of the postal laws, and for services and information looking toward the apprehension of criminals.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 23, page 3, the following:

"And provided further, That all reports of inspectors and other documents submitted in connection with fraud-order investigations shall be open to inspection and examination by any person, firm, or corporation whose right to receive mail at any post-office may be affected thereby."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order against that,

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I admit that the amendment is subject to the point of order, but I hoped that the gentleman would not make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

To complete the work of printing and binding the opinions of assistant attorneys-general for the the Post-Office Department, $10,000.

Mr. MURPHY. I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph, and ask the gentleman the question if that is provided for by law now?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have forgotten the date, but a number of years ago authority was given by Congress for compilation of the opinions of the assistant attorneys-general for the Post-Office Department. The compilation was not completed. The appropriation was entirely expended, and to-day the Department is complaining that it has to resort to letter files or letterpress files in order to ascertain what those decisions were. This item is for a continuation of the compilation and to complete it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to state that authority has been given by Congress for this purpose.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In a letter of the Department to the chairman of the committee, under date of January 21, 1907, the Department made this explanation:

The act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ended June 30, 1904, embraced an item appropriating $5,000 for—

Here are the quotation marks: "Printing and binding the opinions of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department."

And then the letter goes on:

Of that appropriation $4,208.75 was expended in printing and binding two volumes, covering opinions of this office from the date of its establishment, namely, June 23, 1873, to March 7, 1892, both inclusive. To complete the work of compiling, printing, and binding, these opinions there remains to be covered the period from March 7, 1892, to the present time, being nearly fifteen years; and it is believed that if performed with the same economy which characterized the previous work, this can be accomplished at an expenditure of about $10,000, including the preparation and printing of a suitable digest.

Mr. Chairman, that is the authority appropriating $5,000 in the act of June 30, 1904, for this work, and this item of appropriation is for the completion of that service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to state that authority was given and appropriation made to complete the work of printing and binding certain documents

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire whether the gentleman from Missouri has yet made the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has reserved the point of order. The gentleman does not understand that any authority is given definitely for continuing this work.

Mr. PAYNE. Is unanimous consent required to reserve the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order now. The Chair has sufficient information as to what the appropriation was to cover, but now the gentleman from Indiana states that this is a continuation, an indefinite continuation of the work.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not understand this present item is a continuation of this work, but it is to com-I do not understand this plete what was already begun.

The CHAIRMAN. Completing certain documents up to the time that it was made in 1904?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have not before me the I have no objection to its standing over until to-morrow and then I could call the attention of the Chair to the exact statute. I did not have any idea that anybody would object to the completion of that work which had already been undertaken.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think that the gentleman has stated that the work that the House authorized was in progress and reached a certain point in 1904, and it is to complete that work which was in progress.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have quoted from the letter what the item originally was for, and will read it again:

Printing and binding the opinions of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if the appropriation made here is for the purpose of completing the work of printing and binding the opinions then rendered, the Chair would overrule the point of

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy] has full information about the item.

Mr. MURPHY. The chairman of the committee [Mr. Overstreet] read in the letter that it was necessary for printing the opinions of the Attorney-General from the time that they left off down to the present time. That is what the letter stated and that is what the appropriation is for.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is correct in that, the Chair will sustain the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to assistant postmasters at first and second class post-offices, 2, at $4,000 each; 27, at $3,000 each; 6, at $2,500 each; 5, at $2,000; 12, at $1,900 each; 20, at $1,800 each; 60, at $1,700 each; 100, at $1,600 each; 120, at $1,500 each; 105, at $1,400 each; 240, at $1,300 each; 370, at $1,200 each; 360, at $1,100 each; 270, at $1,000 each; 70, at $900 each; 60, at $800 each, and 60, at $700 each; in all, $2,275,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining some information with respect to this paragraph. I should like to know whether it contemplates a reduction or a change in the salaries of assistant postmasters.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It does not contemplate any reduction of the salaries in any office. The several items of appropriation are ascertained by the record of the Department concerning offices that will during the next year, and possibly during the present year, rise into the next higher grade of compensation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is the salary of a second-class postmaster fixed by law, or is it fixed by the discretion of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Are you talking about postmasters or assistant postmasters?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Assistant postmasters.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The law is that the salary of an assistant postmaster may not exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster in the particular office.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is what I had in mind, and I remembered having seen somewhere a criticism or a suggestion of a change on the basis of a reduction of the pay of assistant postmasters some 10 or 15 per cent, and I wondered—

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There has been nothing of that kind contemplated by this bill.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is all I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter clerks in offices of the first and second class shall be divided into seven grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $700; third grade, salary $800; fourth grade, salary $900; fifth grade, salary $1,000; sixth grade, salary $1,100; seventh grade, salary $1,200. That clerks shall be promoted successively to the fourth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be less than $50,000; and to the fifth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be at least $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and to the sixth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000: Provided, That the salary of clerks in second-class offices, except in localities where unusual conditions exist, shall not exceed $1,000.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas to reserve a point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the time is rapidly advancing. If the gentleman has a point of order I hope he will make it, and not reserve it till after we have consumed several hours in discussion. Do I understand that the gentleman is going to reserve a point of order against all of these?

Mr. MACON. I will make it. It is new legislation.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas make the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes; I make the point of order now instead of

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman from Arkansas if he is not willing to let the matter stand for determination by the committee? It is of course subject to a point of order.

Mr. MACON. That is the reason I made it.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. But does not the gentleman feel that he can afford to debate the matter here? It is the only way we can get this proposition before the House.

Mr. MACON. That is the reason I asked to reserve the point of order so it could be debated.

The gentleman ought not Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. to take advantage of so technical a situation.

Mr. MACON. That is the reason I wanted to reserve the point of order, because I wanted to give everyone an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Is the gentleman's mind open to conviction, or is it already closed against this proposition?

Mr. MACON. It is open to conviction always, sir.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. What is the gentleman's doubt about the propriety of this legislation?

Mr. MACON. My doubt about it is this: I think it highly improper to attempt, by legislation of this character, to raise salaries in all of the appropriation bills that are presented to the House for consideration.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Then you are opposed to the increasing of the salaries?

Mr. MACON.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Opposed to all increases of the salaries?

Mr. MACON. Unless they are worthy of increase.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Can you point out where there is any instance in this bill where the increase proposed is not a worthy increase?

Mr. MACON. The burden of showing that is upon you and not on me, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Then I will answer and say that they are all worthy.

Mr. MACON. In your judgment?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.
Mr. MACON. But not in mine, perhaps. When you convince me of the worthiness of the increases, I will quit making points of order; but until you do that, I will not. And I shall discharge my duty as my conscience dictates and as I believe to be right. Under no circumstances shall I be controlled by his judgment exercised in the manner in which he is now trying to exercise it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order. Let the gentleman from Arkansas take the responsibility of making it.

Mr. MACON. I will do that with pleasure.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield for a question?

Mr. MACON.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Arkansas has heretofore been very kind and considerate and generous. [Laughter.] Now, the great majority of the Members on this side of the House favor the increase of salaries of the clerks as well as the increase of the salaries of the carriers; and, assume for a single moment that there are a few unworthy clerks in the service-something I do not at all believe-will not the gentleman recognize the fact that, generally, the clerks in the service are really worthy of this increase of salary? Now, in the spirit of justice and fairness, may we not ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the worthiness or unworthiness of the clerks that I am discussing is not the question. But I want to say, sir, that here in the report presented by this committee it is shown that they are proposing to increase salaries to the amount of nearly $9,000,000 in this particular bill. It seems to me the disposition on the part of the appropriation committees is to flirt millions of dollars around about like an agent would a brand of tobacco that he was advertising by throwing sample plugs to the crowd that had assembled to hear him advertise his wares. When it comes to handling the people's money by the millions in that way, I, as one of their Representatives, am going to raise my voice against it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does not the gentleman think that the clerks, in view of their efficient service and also the increased cost of living, are worthy of the increase provided for in this

Mr. MACON. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that there are thousands of young men in this country who are making bread for these clerks to live upon who do not receive half the pay that the clerks are now receiving.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry,

Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Is a point of order now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question? Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to ask the gentleman if he proposes to make a point of order against the provision for the increase of pay of the rural carriers?

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I will attend to that matter when we reach it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I shall attend to that provision and make the point of order if he makes the point of order here, and the gentleman will be responsible for the two propositions.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I appeal to the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MACON. I want to say to the gentleman from New York-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas will suspend. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has gone out.

Mr. MACON. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chair-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman after that paragraph is read.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the Chair hold that a motion to strike out the last word of the paragraph at the bottom of page 4 is not in order?

The whole paragraph has gone out. The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not the paragraph at the bottom of Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did I not understand that the gentleman from Arkansas reserved the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made and the Chair was called upon for a ruling by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, can I offer my amendment as a substitute for that item?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that you can not offer a substitute for a vacancy. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized to offer his amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new provision the following:
"Provided further, That in addition to the foregoing allowance there shall be allowed and paid to each employee in the respective grades a sum which together with the allowance herein provided would equal 20 per cent upon the salary now fixed by law."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order and the Chair sustains it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sterling having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 16:

H. R. 20060. An act granting an increase of pension to Anna E. Hughes

H. R. 20168. An act for the relief of F. Kraut, of Leon Springs, Tex.; and

H. R. 20169. An act for the relief of Margaret Neutze, of Leon Springs, Tex.

On February 18:

H. R. 8365. An act for the relief of C. A. Berry;

H. R. 19930. An act referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication;

H. R. 24473. An act to define the status of certain patents and pending entries, selections, and filings on lands formerly within the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota;

H. J. Res. 224. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases; and

H. R. 15242. An act to confirm titles to certain lands in the State of Louisiana.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter carriers in the city delivery service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $600; second grade, salary $700; third grade, salary $800; fourth grade, salary $900; fifth grade, salary $1,000; sixth grade, salary $1,100. That carriers shall be promoted successively to the fourth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be less than $50,000; and to the fifth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000; and to the sixth grade in offices where the annual gross receipts shall be in excess of $200,000: Provided, That the compensation of a letter carrier shall not exceed $900 in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are less than $50,000; and shall not exceed $1,000 in offices where the annual gross receipts are in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000; and shall not exceed $1,100 in offices where the annual gross receipts are in excess of $500,000 and not in excess of $500,000; and shall not exceed $1,100 in offices where the annual gross receipts are the excess of $200,000: Provided further, That letter carriers employed in cities recognized by the Post-Office Department as now having a population in excess of $500,000; where the gross receipts are of said offices at the time of the sas sage of this act are less than $200,000, shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the requirements of this act applicable to post-Offices whose gross receipts are in excess of $200,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves the point of order on the item.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. How long can a man hold in reservation a point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon a ruling. The gentleman should either make the point of order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to answer a parliamentary inquiry. When a point of order is reserved the merits of the proposition may be discussed until some member of the committee calls for a ruling, and then the Chair will rule. The gentleman from Illinois now calls for a ruling, insists upon the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all promotions of both clerks and carriers shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade. No promotion shall be made except upon evidence satisfactory to the Post-Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employee during the preceding year. The Post-Office Department may reduce a clerk or carrier from a higher to a lower grade whenever his efficiency falls below a fair standard or whenever necessary for purposes of discipline. When a clerk or carrier has been reduced in salary he may be restored to his former grade or advanced to an intermediate grade at the beginning of any quarter following the reduction, on evidence that his record has been satisfactory during the intervening period. When a clerk or carrier falls of promotion because of unsatisfactory service he may be promoted at the beginning of the second quarter thereafter, or of any subsequent quarter, on evidence that his record has been satisfactory during the intervening period. Clerks and carriers of the highest grade in their respective offices shall be eligible for promotion to the higher positions in said post-offices.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, because of the exercise of what I conceive to bé a legitimate duty gentlemen of the committee have seen fit to act in a manner that I consider to be unbecoming in them. In fact, sir, threats have been made against the increase of the salaries of the rural carriers because I made a point of order against certain paragraphs a few moments ago. I refer to the threat of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzernald], that if I persisted in the point of order that I was then making against that paragraph that he proposed to make a point against the paragraph increasing the salaries of the rural carriers

Sir, he can do that if he likes. That is his privilege. If he is honest in his desire to have them remain at what they are, then, sir, he has a perfect right to exercise that privilege upon this floor, and I will never be heard to question his authority or privilege to do so; but, sir, if he thinks they ought to be raised, and he is simply going to reduce them because of my acts, let him do it, and let the responsibility rest upon him, as it must, because, sir, I am not the keeper of any man's vote or voice upon the floor, and I am not standing sponsor for the salaries of any of the officials of this Government. Therefore, sir, it will be no punishment to me. Let him bear the sin of his own acts. I am prepared to stand for my acts, and I expect to do what I honestly believe to be right, regardless of the opinion or acts of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. I suppose that the gentleman from Arkansas in-[Laughter.] tended to justify himself, and I am surprised to find that he is trying to exonerate me. Those who know me, Mr. Chairman, know I do not need any assistance in that way for my actions in this House. The situation with regard to this bill is very clear, and I desire it to go into the RECORD for the benefit of the constituents of the gentleman from Arkansas. This bill carries provisions which contemplate increase of salaries of a great number of employees of the Postal Department, including clerks in certain offices, city carriers, and rural carriers. Those provisions in this bill are technically in violation of the rules of the House. The practically unanimous desire of Members of the House at this late day in the session to have an opportunity to pass upon the question as to whether the pay of rural carriers and of city carriers and of certain clerks shall be increased has resulted in the committee coming here and practically asking unanimous consent that the House be given an opportunity to pass upon all of those questions.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon], fortunately for those of us who will not permit an injustice to be done, is compelled to make his points of order against the provisions for the increase of the clerks in the city offices and against the increases for the city carriers before the provisions for the increases for the rural carriers are reached. I desired to ascertain the gentle-man's opinion as to the propriety of increasing the salaries of the rural carriers, because if he favors an increase, and desires that the House pass upon that increase in this bill, he should be equally willing to permit the House to pass upon the other pro-posed increases. If he persists in his determination to prevent the House passing upon the proposed increases for the city carriers and clerks he alone will be responsible for the House being prevented from passing upon the proposed increase of compensa-I know it would embarrass the gentleman from Arkansas

[Mr. Macon] to make a point of order against the provision to increase the salaries of the rural carriers. I am and always have been his good friend, and in consideration of his kindness and of the exercise by him of his prerogative in preventing the House passing upon the increases of the salaries of the city clerks and the city carriers, for his benefit I shall interpose the point of order against the increase for the rural carriers. And I want this House, and I want his constituents particularly, to know that he is the person who is responsible for my action. I do not intend to permit a gentleman like the gentleman from Arkansas to come and to reap for his district the benefits of violation of the rules and prevent equal benefits being accorded to the gentlemen from districts differently situated.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] can take his Either he will permit the House to pass upon all of these proposed increases, or he will have no opportunity to have it pass upon those in which he and his district are particularly interested.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. JAMES rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].
Mr. JAMES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he believes the salary given in this bill to rural carriers is an adequate salary

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the salary proposed to be given to the rural carriers is reasonable compensation for the ervice, and I favor it.

Mr. JAMES. And that they should have it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They should have it.
Mr. JAMES. Would the gentleman deny to the rural carriers of the United States just compensation when they are not to blame for the action of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I would not do that. But I will assume the responsibility for bringing to the notice of the gentleman's constituents the fact that by his action it is impossible to have those in whom his people are interested treated properly in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Illinois rise to a parliamentary inquiry?

The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to rec-Mr. MANN. ognition prior to the gentleman from Arkansas, I believe. gentleman from Arkansas just spoke on his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas, it seems to the Chair, was on his feet first and should be recognized to reply.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to shut out the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has expressed his friendship for me. [Laughter.] He has exhibited a great deal of consideration and friendship for me since I have been a Member of this body. He has put himself out of the way time after time to render me great service. He has gone to great lengths in his effort to show that he was my friend in season and out of season, by day and by night; but, sir, I have failed to see or feel the effects of any of his friendly efforts in my behalf.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not regret my generosity.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MACON. I suppose not, but I want to say to the gentleman that if his efforts against me in my district have no more effect upon the honorable constituency that I represent than his efforts in my behalf have had for me since I have been here, there will nothing come of his attempt to hurt me at home by making a bad record for me up here. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized and unless gentlemen have points of order or parliamenary inquiries they will not be recognized until the gentleman from IIlinois has concluded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas is subject to criticism for making the point of order. It was a right which he had under the rules of the House, rules made for the protection of any Member of the House. Nor do I quite agree with my friend from New York, who, in the heat of the moment, states that he will make the point of order upon the provision in the bill with reference to rural carriers.

Mr. Chairman, it is undoubtedly true that the city clerks and carriers ought to have their salaries increased, and they appeal to this Congress for justice in their behalf. It is also undoubtedly true that the rural carriers are entitled to have their salaries increased, and I have no doubt that while the gentleman from Arkansas, within the limits of his province, has made the point of order under the rules, there is also an other provision of the rules under which this House, in my judgment, will be enabled to consider both propositions, at the right time and in the right manner. [Applause.]
In my short experience in this House I never have seen the time when one man, under the rules and against the opinions of the rest of the House, could sustain his side by merely making a point of order. I have heard criticism of the rules of this House and the management of this House at different times, but in ten years' experience in this House I have learned that when a majority of the House had reached a conclusion upon a particular proposition it found a way to put it into the law; and notwithstanding the exercise of his rights by my dis-tinguished friend from Arkansas, in my judgment, the House will find a way on these propositions. [Applause.] Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I move that all debate on the pending proposition be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. On the paragraph?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. On the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn. The gentleman—

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. HUGHES. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from West Virginia kindly allow the Chair to state the question? Then the Chair will respond to a parliamentary inquiry. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on this paragraph and any amendments thereto be now closed. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. HUGHES. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry, and to send this amendment to the Clerk's desk and see if it will be in order to offer it at this time.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order that that is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. 'The gentleman asks a hypothetical question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, I understand there is no motion pending except the pro forma amendment to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. And that has been withdrawn; but the Chair understands the effect of the gentleman's motion, if adopted, will be to permit the offering of amendments, but to prevent all debate thereon. The motion is that all debate on this paragraph and any amendment thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize gentlemen to offer amendments.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On pages 5 and 6, wherever the word "fifty" appears, strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the point of order that those items have gone out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. amendment applies to paragraphs of the bill which have been stricken out or passed.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter any clerk shall be eligible for transfer to the service of a carrier, and any carrier shall be eligible for transfer to the service of a clerk, such transfer to be made to any grade not higher than the corresponding grade, and the time which such clerk or carrier shall have served in the grade from which such transfer was made shall be counted in connection with the service to which such transfer may be made in computing the time of service necessary to entitle such employees to promotion: Provided, That no clerk or carrier shall be promoted more than one grade within any one year's period of service.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes a point of order against the provision, and the Chair sustains the point of order against the provision, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry:
Was the point of order made against the proviso only?

Mr. MACON. No; against the paragraph.

The CHAIDMAN Against the paragraph beginning with

The CHAIRMAN. Against the paragraph, beginning with line 18.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. CROMER. I offer an independent amendment.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The reading of the bill is at line 4 on page 8, as I understand.
The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I ask for order, in order that we may hear the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Will gentlemen standing in the middle aisle please be seated?

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman-The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. CROMER. I have an amendment to offer at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. A new paragraph?
Mr. CROMER. Yes; I will have to offer it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as an independent paragraph the following:
"That all clerks and letter carriers at first and second class postoffices shall be granted leave of absence, with pay, not to exceed thirty days in each year, exclusive of intervening Sundays and holidays, under such regulations as the Department shall prescribe."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter auxiliary employees may be employed to be paid for actual service at the rate of 30 cents an hour: Provided, That such employees shall be required to work not less than two hours daily: And provided further, That such employees shall be eligible for appointment as clerks and carriers of the first grade.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter substitutes may be employed to be paid at the rate of 30 cents an hour when serving for absent clerks and carriers: Provided, That such substitutes shall be eligible for appointment as auxiliary employees and as clerks and carriers of the first grade.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Auditors, two, at not exceeding $3,000 each.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 8, strike out the word "two" and insert "private secretary three."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that that it is new legislation.
Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; I think we ought to be progressing

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, principally for the purpose of making an inquiry which I would have made if, very much to my regret, paragraphs on pages 5 and 6 had not gone out on points of order. Also for the further purpose of answering an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in relation to the testimony of Mr. Pinchot, which the gentleman will see, when I come to read his testimony, is confined to the clerical force in Washington.

I read from his testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. What conclusion have you reached with reference to the question as to whether or not any portion of the men engaged in the Government service receive more or less than the same men would receive in rendering substantially the same service for private parties?

Mr. PINCHOT. The employees in the lower clerical positions are overpaid, as compared with those in the outside business world.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you be able to fix approximately a limit within which the salaries should be called lower—say, from $1,400 within which the salaries should be carried lower—say, from $1,400 down?

Mr. Pinchot. From $1,400 down. Would not that be a proper division, Mr. Price?

Mr. Price. Yes; $1,400 down.

The Chairman. Taking the salaries from $1,400 down, your opinion, then, would be that the average salary paid to Government employees is larger than that paid to men of the same ability rendering substantially the same service to private parties?

Mr. Pinchot. Yes.

The Chairman. And about how much?

Mr. Pinchot. From a fifth to a third, approximately.

The Chairman. That would be 20 to 25 per cent?

Mr. Pinchot. Twenty to 30 per cent would approximate it.

The Chairman. That conclusion, as I understand it, is a result of a careful study of this question?

Mr. Pinchot. Yes; but let me add there is a reason why that should be so.

be so. The Chairman. I will come to that a little later.

Then a little further on-

Then a little further on—

The Chairman. Do you mean from $1,400 down?

Mr. Pinchot. From $1,400 down. There ought to be an increase above that, but I am speaking now of the grades from $1,400 down, taking what roughly may be called the clerical end of the Government's work. The Government pays more for that kind of service than is paid on the outside, in my judgment; but there is very excellent reason why that should be so. In the first place, the Government requires a higher grade of employee than the average business organization, and is not satisfied unless that grade is reached. In the second place, the apportionment by States under the Civil Service Commission means that a very much larger proportion of people in Washington are living away from home, and therefore under extra expense, than is the case in commercial life.

And be further states:

And he further states:

The CHAIRMAN. That takes it up to $1,400. Whether it has reached the limit is, of course, open for discussion.

Mr. PINCHOT. Exactly. I want to add that the Government is not yet paying sufficiently in excess of the salaries paid outside to make the lives of the clerks here as reasonably comfortable as they ought to be.

A slight increase is required. That increase the Keep Commission has worked out and recommended; and in ten bureaus we find that the increase recommended amounts to between 6 and 10 per cent beyond the present salaries paid.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, in the list below $1,400?
Mr. PINCHOT. No.
The CHAIRMAN. You mean that includes the whole list?
Mr. PINCHOT. That includes the lists up to the end of the clerical grade, as we call it—$2,100.
The CHAIRMAN. An increase of from 6 to 10 per cent?
Mr. PINCHOT. From 6 to 10 per cent in the salaries now paid.

Now, my inquiry of the chairman is this, if the Chair will excuse me: This statement here relates to an increase of 6 to 10 per cent upon the salaries paid here in Washington, as the result of a careful investigation made. Now, what I wanted to inquire was whether the increases recommended here—I have not intimated any objection to any of them-were made upon the basis of a careful investigation as to the services rendered and their fair market value or are they purely arbitrary in their character? Of course, the paragaph has gone out, but I understand from information from the gentleman from Illinois that we may later have that same question before us in another parliamentary status, and I would like to have the gentleman state in relation to that what the fact is.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to enter upon a discussion of that item at this late hour. I ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendents of delivery and superintendents of mails, twenty-three, at not exceeding $2,700 each.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the gentleman from Missouri on his feet endeavoring to secure recognition?

Mr. MURPHY. I was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman om Missouri. to make the point of order. Will the gentleman from Missouri, to make the point of order.

state his point of order?

Mr. MURPHY. That changes existing law. There are seventeen superintendents of delivery and superintendents of mails, and this increases them to twenty-three.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the existing law authorizes the employment of superintendents, and indeed in all of the various titled provisions following in the next ten pages or more there is no change of existing law as to the designation. There is no way, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate for the postal service at all except as it grows, and as offices ripen into larger offices, requiring a larger number of employees, provisions by way of appropriations are made for such growths. There is absolutely no change of designated places. The existing law authorizes seventeen of these places as a whole. authorize twenty-three in order to take care of the growth of these offices where the business has developed beyond the machinery that is now provided in accordance with the law.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to say the existing law fixes the number at seventeen?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The current appropriation law fixes seventeen of such employees. There is no other way to provide for an additional number, and let me say, Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that the only way to provide for additional employee

The CHAIRMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana if there is anything outside of the appropriation bill that authorizes the appropriation for superintendents?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Nothing. The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair sustains the point of

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair sustains the point of order, will the Chair hear a little further on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois permit me? I believe the chairman of the committee made a misstatement under a misapprehension of the purport of the question put by the Chair in saying that there was no other law than that carried in the appropriation bill. As I understand it, there is substantive law providing for these offices, but not providing for the number thereof.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, I made that statement.

simply referred to the total number.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the Chairman to address to the gentleman from Indiana the question whether there was any | in the bill.

provision of law outside the appropriation bill for these respective officers

The CHAIRMAN. That was the question the Chair asked. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, I wish to inform the Chair that there is such a law providing for these respective officials, but not limited as to the number.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is important we should know what the law is.

Mr. STAFFORD. That can easily be presented, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Perhaps the gentleman from Missouri can state what law it is in violation of. He has made the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not care to discuss that point, but I do want to say this, that the gentleman offered an amendment to increase auditors a little while ago and the chairman of the committee made a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri, if there is any general authority of law for the employment of these people, the Chair will overrule the point of order. If there is not, the Chair will sustain it: but the Chair would like to know of the gentleman from Missouri or some one what the law is.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have not the law at hand, but I am satisfied there is a general law relative to the maintenance of the postal service.

Mr. MANN. I go a little further than the gentleman from Indiana goes in this; there is authority of law for the maintenance of the Post-Office Department. It is sufficiently evident to every person that the Post-Office Department is a growing department.

That it is something that must be taken care of; that it is impossible to have the same number of clerks to-day and have the same number last year and have the same number ten years from now, or next year, with the number of clerks in different grades, and this case goes to the whole question of clerks of from $100 up, and the whole question of clerks must be considered in connection with the work of the Post-Office Department, and that it is a part of the maintenance of the Post-Office Department. Now, it is not possible, it is not practicable, and it is not proper that every year the Post-Office Department or the Post-Office Committee should be required to bring into the House a bill fixing the number of clerks for the ensuing fiscal year before the appropriation bill comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks except for clerks in the classified service in the Department it is necessary.

Mr. MANN. These, of course, are clerks.
The CHAIRMAN. These are superintendents not employed The CHAIRMAN. here, but employed in the post-offices throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. I understand that these are the clerks employed in the post-offices throughout the country. The same thing would go to the pay of all things that are not provided for by law fixing the amount of pay. Now, the post-office appropriation bill is a varying amount every year. It must vary with It is a service that is in existence and in progress. the service.

The CHAIRMAN. But in the absence of law the Chair would have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MANN. But the law provides for the maintenance of the post-office service.

The CHAIRMAN. It applies to the clerks in the classified service here.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the law, I beg the pardon of the Chair, in reference to the post-offices applies to the post-offices throughout the country, and applies to the necessary people to run the post-office service throughout the country. This bill, of course, has nothing to do

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois call the Chair's attention to that law?

Mr. MANN. I think we can if the Chair will give us time.

can not lay my finger on it now.

law is; therefore we can take a little time. I suggest that it go over until to-morrow.

The CHAIDMAN

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUM-PACKER asks unanimous consent that this matter may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MURPHY. May I say a word? The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection. Mr. MANN. The same matter applies to nearly all the items

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, examiners of stations, finance clerks, foremen of crews, private secretaries, superintendent of carriers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 369, at not exceeding $1,400 each.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARsons] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 8, insert, after the words "chief stamp clerks," the word "clerks,"

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman make that to read "distributing and regis-

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Parsons1

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Parsons] that instead of saying "clerks" he designate them as "registering and distributing clerks.'

Mr. PARSONS. I will say to the gentleman that I telegraphed to New York to find out the proper designation of the men who are now paid under the designation of "clerks," which was the designation in last year's appropriation bill. I understand that some of them are distributing clerks and some of them may be doing other work which does not come within the definition of "distributer."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman, I presume, knows that the word "clerk" is in this item of current law. Having made a general recommendation for the classification, it was the clear intent to limit "clerks" to no higher grade than $1,200, and let the employment above the $1,200 grade be designated "employees," and it is on that account that the word "clerk" was omitted. And appreciating the situation in the New York office, where there are now employed some employees under the technical designation of "clerks," but who are really registering and distributing clerks, I suggest that he make his amendment read, instead of "clerks," "registry and distributing clerks.'

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that may not meet the situation in New York. The postmaster informs me that some of them are known as distributers, registry, moneyorder, inquiry, and other clerks, and I have telegraphed to New York to find out what he means by "other clerks," so that, if there is no objection, the exact designation may be inserted, and I would be willing, if unanimous consent is granted, that this be passed now and be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am entirely willing that unanimous consent may be given that the gentleman may offer an amendment to that paragraph and allow the remainder of the paragraph to be adopted. I will interpose no objection to an amendment being offered to-morrow.

Mr. PARSONS. That will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have the right to recur to this paragraph and offer an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the reservation of the point of order will apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make his point of order after the amendment is offered. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, book-keepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, private secretaries, superintendents of carliers, superintendents of delivery, superintendents of mails, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 606, at not exceeding $1,300 each.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 19, insert, after the words "chief stamp clerk," the word "clerks."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request that the same condition shall apply to this paragraph as does to the preceding.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I reserve the point of order on that Mr. PARSONS. And I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have the right to recur to that paragraph and offer an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, chief stamp clerks, clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, printers, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, superintendents of stations, and machinist, 2,003, at not exceeding $1,200 each.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 8, strike out "two thousand and three" and insert two thousand four hundred and ninety-eight."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, printers, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 3,603, at not exceeding $1,100 each.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 13, strike out "three thousand six hundred and three" and insert "three thousand one hundred and eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carpenters, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, and pressmen, 4,091, at not exceeding $800 each.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 1, strike out "four thousand and ninety-one" and in-rt "seven thousand six hundred and eight."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire what these increases are about?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, these three increases were to make corrections in the total of the number of employees necessary for each of the several classes now employed in the service. It is the number of employees recommended by the Department for additional service during the next fiscal year. It was all prepared by the Department, and the committee accepted the statement of the Department. The Department made a mistake and later our attention was called to They made no changes in the items of appropriation of money. Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "and" on page 13, line 24, and insert on page 14, line 1, after the word "pressmen," the words "and laborers."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment. I do not just understand the force of it.

Mr. OLCOTT. Why, the position of affairs in New York is this: There are a number of laborers that are employed, according to your report. I think you seek an increase of the salary of some of them, and under the wording of that particular paragraph I do not think it would be possible unless we include the word "laborers." I think it is entirely in accord with the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, increasing the number sought to be affected by this ing the number sought to be affected by this.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman from New York, would not the adoption of this amendment increase the salaries of the laborers in the New York office from $720 to $800?

Mr. OLCOTT. Undoubtedly it would to some of them.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And therefore it would be a change of law. Now, while it may be possible that a number there were entitled to that increase, yet we have made such a general promotion all along the line that while it will operate at various other offices in the promotion of some of these laborers, I think it ought not to be incorporated in the bill in the form the gentleman has offered it. Let me explain, and the gentleman will see the point. We have sought to make promotions of clerks by fixing the number of the individual employees in the From the $400 grade up to the $1,200 grade we several grades. fixed, in these items which have just been passed, the specific number of employees now employed in those various grades, and to the numbers have added a sufficient additional number to care for the promotions which have been recommended, as well as the employment of the additional force recommended by the Department.

In other words, the committee has reported to the House all of the employees estimated by the Department for the additional service on account of the growth of the postal service, and in addition to the appropriations to cover all those additional employees we have arranged these specific items of appropriation just passed upon so as to permit of the promotions which have been recommended, and that has taken care of those laborers, so far as the recommendations of the Department and of the committee go.

Mr. OLCOTT. Then I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he means by that that these people will be promoted to the higher grade mentioned in here as pressmen?

Will the laborer be promoted to be a pressman?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. These laborers would be eligible to promotion to a different designation undoubtedly, but we do not employ any laborers in the grade of $800, so your amendment if adopted would be in effect adding laborers to that class which heretofore has been restricted to carpenters, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, and pressmen; but it would not deny promotion to a laborer from the $700 grade into the $800 grade by a change of his designation and a change of his employment.

Mr. OLCOTT. I certainly am not a stickler as to what the man is to be called. I merely want to provide for an opportunity for increased compensation.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I think ample provision has been made, and inasmuch as these computations have all been made by the computers of the Department, based upon the recommendations for all the promotions which we carry in the bill, I would rather not disturb the scheme by adding a new designation to one of these particular items.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Did not the First Assistant Postmaster-General in his report recommend that the highest salary for laborer be $900?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not now recall.

Mr. PARSONS. My recollection is that that was his recommendation.

Mr. OLCOTT. I am only fearful that if I do not press my amendment there will be some people that the New York post-office desires to advance who will be left out.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will not interpose a point of order, but I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he knows what pay laborers get who do the janitor work and work of that sort in the Government buildings in New York?

Mr. OLCOTT. I can not answer that. Mr. MANN. They are under the Treasury Department and they only get $600 a year. The same laborers, doing the same work under the Post-Office Department, get $700 a year. The gentleman wants to make their pay $800 a year. I hope the gentleman will join with me in attempting to get some pressure to bear on the other distinguished gentleman from New York and get the $600 people raised to $700 before we raise the $700 people to $800.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. OLCOTT was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carpenters, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, janitors, laborers, messengers, porters, pressmen, and watchmen, 3,997, at not exceeding $700 each.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14 strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 and insert in lieu thereof carpenters, janitors, laborers, messengers, porters, pressmen, and watchmen, 480, at not to exceed $700 each."

Mr. PARSONS. May I ask the chairman of the committee

why that change is made.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, which came in after the bill had been reported. It is in order to make the authorization conform with the practice of the Department in this regard.

Mr. PARSONS. The effect of the amendment is, as I understand it, a reduction from 3,997 to 400?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes; the number that have been promoted and the others that will come up from below.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, to explain. On its face this is a reduction of 2,600 men from the force.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They are added above. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Carpenters, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, janitors, laborers, messengers, porters, pressmen, and watchmen, $4,600, at not exceeding $600 each: Provided, That 600 of the additional clerks of this grade shall be immediately available.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting in line 11, after the word "grade," the following: "and the sum of $120,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 11, after the word "grade," insert "and the sum of $120,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this provision authorizes the 600 clerks of the $600 grade to be immediately available for employment during the current fiscal year. The amount of money to carry the compensation of those clerks was inadvertently omitted. With this amendment these 600 clerks, with a total pay of $120,000, will be available immediately on the passage of this bill for employment during the remainder of the current fiscal year.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to get some information from the chairman of the committee. I ask the chairman whether or not there is any increase in the salaries of the janitors, porters, watchmen, and laborers in the two paragraphs just perfected and in the two following paragraphs?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Every employee below $1,100 is provided with an increase, provided he has served at least one year and enjoys a record for efficiency.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have been comparing these paragraphs with the paragraphs in the bill of last year and I find no increase.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman will realize that when we make promotions it requires some little skill at computation to provide the vacancies at the top into which the lower employees may be advanced, and if in connection with that process of computation he realizes that provision is never made for all promotions to take effect upon the first day of the fiscal year, he will see that the two together operate to provide for the general promotions during the year. And I will say to the gentleman, under the measures now adopted by the House, with the exception of one item which is pending on a point of order, provision is made for the pay for the next fiscal year of every employee now in the service at that specific grade of pay, plus employment and compensation of all the new employees recommended by the Department and necessary on account of the increased service. And in addition to both of these all of the promotions of clerks below $1,200 which have been recommended by the committee and in these several items, let me say, have now been adopted.

We have provided for the promotion of these clerks under the scheme of promotion that has gone out on a point of order, and for the next fiscal year at least these advancements are now provided for.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, for instance-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And permit me to say that these computations upon which I have based this positive statement were made by the computers at the Department, and they assure the committee that these several provisions which I have named are undoubtedly set out in the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana that I have no disposition to oppose an increase of these salaries. I wanted to be satisfied that there is a movement to increase the salaries of the laboring men, the janitors and that class of employees, and I hope they will not be overlooked.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have made a computation of this whole bill of the increase. The gentleman will see an increase in the $2,000 grade means an increase all the way down the line, because the promotions go consecutively up.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, let me ask the gentleman from Illinois. Take, for instance, a laborer who has a place in this paragraph we are coming to shortly at $400. Now, I assume that the only increase he can get is by being promoted Am I right? into the $500 class.

That is right. Mr. MANN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, these four paragraphs on page 14 relate chiefly to laborers of the same class as the

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Well, they relate chiefly to

Mr. MANN. I think they do not relate chiefly to laborers. Permit me to call the gentleman's attention to this. What he is referring to is under items of $400, $500, $600, and $700 grades, and a majority of the $700 positions are clerks. A majority of the $600 positions are clerks. Now, an increase of $800 places allows promotion from the $700 to the $800 place. That permits a promotion from the $600 to the $700 grade. permits promotion from the $500 to the $600, and from the $400 to the $500, and if you add a thousand to the $800 grade, that would mean a promotion of a thousand in each grade. Now, as a matter of fact, in this bill-and I propose to insert a statement in the Record for that purpose—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I move to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. Now, as a matter of fact, in this bill before you get down to the $600 grade there is provision practically for an increase of every person in the $600 grade to the seven hundred. There is an increase of 50 per cent in the $1,200 grade. There is an increase of several thousand when you get below the thousand-dollar grade, so that practically every clerk and every person in the Post-Office Department holding a position of less than $700 is subject to promotion, as I figure it out.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, right there, what is the highest wage paid to a laboring man engaged in either of those classes at this time?

Mr. MANN. The highest wage that is permitted to what is called a "laborer," who is not a skilled artisan, is $700 under the law regardless of the appropriation bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I wish to ask further, as a matter of fact, in actual practice and experience do these laborers get beyond that? Are they advanced in actual practice into another line of work, for instance, as clerks?

Mr. MANN. When it comes to that, I am informed that they

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. So, then, the highest wage paid to a laboring man of any class would be $700.

Mr. MANN. As laborer; yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. And then it is scaled down to

Mr. MANN. Of course most of the laborers to whom the gentleman referred are laborers who probably do janitor work or such a class of work, and I think when they get to $700 under the bill there is no provision for their increase.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. And they naturally would not pass from the class of laborers, to which they have belonged, to the class of clerks?

Mr. MANN. My observation has been that they seldom pass from laborers to clerks.

Mr. Chairman, I have made some computations and tables showing a comparison between the pending bill and existing and prior appropriations as to the number of clerks, and also as to the possibility of promotions, etc., which I shall insert in the Record for the benefit of the House.

I have made the computations on the pending bill based on the items in the bill as introduced, but I have called the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Post-Office Committee to an apparent difference between the statements in his report and some of the items in the bill, and especially in regard to the number of clerks carried in the bill at a salary of $1,200, and I understand that these differences in the bill are to be corrected, which will add materially to the number of promotions in one or two of the classes and make the number in some cases different from the figures in my table. In the main, however, the table is correct as the bill will probably finally pass the

I shall also insert in the RECORD a letter from the Postmaster-General, giving some information in regard to the clerks and carriers at the Chicago post-office, in answer to a resolution which I recently introduced in the House, and which seems to me to show, by the number of post-office employees who have declined appointment or who after being appointed have resigned, the urgent necessity of making such increase in postal salaries as will obtain for and retain in the service of the Government at least a sufficient number of permanent employees to properly transact the postal business.

Out of a total of 25,379 clerks receiving salaries up to and including $1,400 per annum, 18,290 receive $900 per annum and less.

In the last three years there have been no increases in the $1,300 and $1,400 grades.

The $1,200 grade has only been increased by 183 clerks in three years.

The $1,100 grade has only been increased by 108 clerks in three

The $1,000 grade has only been increased by 110 clerks in three

The $1,000 grade has only been increased by 110 deltas in the years.

It is estimated that under operation of existing conditions a clerk is compelled to serve from eight to nine years before reaching the grade of $900 per annum.

Statistics of the Post-Office Department show that 12 per cent of the post-office clerks receiving $1,000 per annum and less resigned from the service during the last fiscal year ending July 1, 1906.

According to the number of resignations of post-office clerks for the month of October last, the percentage for the present fiscal year will be 21 per cent.

Statistics of the Post-Office Department show that the post-office clerks employed in first and second class post-offices worked a daily average of eight hours and forty-three minutes.
The post-office appropriation bill of last year provided for the possible promotion of 50 per cent of the $600 clerks, which meant that only 2,121 of this lowest grade could be promoted.
Forty per cent of the $700 grade were promoted, which meant only 1,662 out of a total of 4,155 clerks.

Respectfully.

GEO. B. CORTELYOU, Postmaster-General.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I hope the committee and the House will not overlook the laborers. These men who come along at the end of the line are apt to be overlooked. And I want, while I am on my feet, to say one thing more. I regret, of course, as most of us do, that the provisions for the increase of salaries for the clerks and carriers have gone out, and my judgment is that the rules which permit putting paragraphs of that character out on a point of order are wrong and ought to be changed. It should be for the committee having the bill in charge and for the Committee of the Whole House to say what the employees of the Government shall be paid.

To sit here and say we can not increase the salaries of the employees of the Government, one year over another, is to state an absurdity in the practice and proceedings of this House. The only objection I have to the stricken paragraphs lies in the fact that, in my judgment, the carriers have been done an injustice in that for certain years their salaries have been decreased instead of increased. I hope when the rule comes in, if it does, that we will be able not only to give to the clerks and the carriers an increase over present salaries, but that we will be able to prevent a decrease for any employee of the Government in any of the classes designated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I made some remarks this afternoon, and I wish to insert in connection therewith some statements in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long are we going to run here?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will be glad to state that I wanted to close with the second line on page 15. We are now. at line 12 on page 14. That will close this particular subject,

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. SHERLEY. To ask the chairman of the committee a certain question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand, the increase of salary is made by promoting men from one grade to a higher grade. Does that carry with it a change of duties, or are these men simply performing their old duties under a new classification?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I understand in a very great many, almost all, the cases it involves a change of duty and change of responsibility. It is all service of a similar character. Of course, when you promote a clerk in the office who is drawing $600 per year to the $700 grade, that is not necessarily a change of actual work.

But the additional $100 is given because he is worth that much more after a year's service, and renders that much more service to the Government. But, after you get up to thousanddollar clerks, they are doing a more intricate work. At twelve hundred dollars you will find distributing clerks who are obliged to have a high degree of intelligence in the distribution of the mail, necessitating a knowledge of schedules of trains and times of their departure, connections, and all of that; so that there is a great difference in the character of the work of the $1,200 clerk and the $600 clerk, and I assume there is some gradual advance in the duty as well as pay.

Mr. SHERLEY. One more question: If you increase the compensation simply by changing the employment from a lower grade to a higher grade, how have you provided for the increase of the men at the top grade?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. By adding a certain number arbitrarily to that top grade and advancing from the next lower into that number.

Mr. SHERLEY. What do you do with those who have no other grade to be elevated to?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. By grades we mean the grades of compensation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that. Now, highest grade of compensation, how are the salaries of such men increased? Is that done by direct increase in salary or have you created a new grade?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Take, for example, the thir-

Take, for example, the thirteen-hundred dollar grade of employees. They are all designated "employees." They are not clerks. Now, we provide in the current law for 445 employees at the grade of $1,300. This bill carries 606. So that the difference between 606 and 445 will give the correct number to be advanced from $1,200 to

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, what do you do with the $1,300 men? Do they get into a higher class? And when they get to the higher, what do you do then with them?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They get into the higher grade of $1,400. We make no change in the $1,400 grade. In the current law there are 369; this bill carries 369. Therefore you can not promote from $1,300 into the $1,400 except when there are vacancies there.

Mr. MANN. You carried them in the old law, but there are increases.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. You provide certain increase above $1,300 which would make leeway through the $1,300 into these higher grades.

Mr. SHERLEY. But what do you do with the higher grades? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That takes a process of computation. Here is a table, which I hold in my hand, beginning with the highest pay in the employ of the service, $3,200. There are eight of them.

Mr. SULLIVAN. What are the duties of that grade?

Mr. MANN. Superintendent of delivery and superintendent of mails.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That is the item which is temporarily passed by. The superintendent of delivery and the superintendent of mails, $3,200. No, that is the $2,700 class. The $3,200 is the superintendent of delivery, and I will be glad, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will attend to my suggestion, if he really wants to know.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was attending, but another gentleman gave me in one sentence the whole thing I wanted to get at.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Is the gentleman satisfied?

And that is that the highest grades were Mr. SHERLEY. not increased at all.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman had stated that, that would have ended the discussion.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I stated that the tables showed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks in charge of stations, janitors, laborers, messengers, porters, and watchmen, fifty, at not exceeding $400 each.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. Last year I was not here when the post-office bill was passed, but the year before that I asked the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to substations. A reduction was made, a decided reduction was made, in the committee, I think, of the three and four hundred dollar substations, last year. Now, I do not know exactly what is the gentleman's intention. large cities it is absolutely necessary to have these substations, or, as the gentleman calls them here, part of them stations and part of them contract stations.

The Post-Office Department made a rule in reference to the pay of these stations, and after making the rule they have consistently declined to maintain the rule when it came to the performance of their part of it in the payment of the salary; and last year, in some cases, instead of making the increases where they had promised increases, they made a reduction, although the business had vastly increased. It is impossible in some parts of the city of Chicago, in the territory which I represent, to obtain this service, which if performed in the rural district would have a postmaster who would draw a salary of $2,000 a year; and it seems to me, in the interests of the Post-Office Department, that it is advisable to permit the sale of stamps where it is convenient to the people. We passed a bill here the other day to do away with the special-delivery stamps because the distinguished gentleman from Missouri received a letter from a man who stated that he could not buy a special-delivery stamp offhand.

Now, if it is so advisable to add to the opportunity to use special-delivery letters, is it not equally advisable to add to the opportunity to use ordinary stamps? There are many places in Chicago where it is not convenient to the people to buy a postage stamp without going a long distance, and when they send in petitions and applications for the establishment of those little $100, $200, and $300 contract stations they are told that the appropriation was not sufficient. I have a dozen cases of that sort in my district now, where the population would warrant a considerable salary if it were out of the city. I can not see what the intention is this year. But I know that last year the number was insufficient and that the year before last it was insufficient. I do not know what the increase is this year, but it ought to be the policy of the Post-Office Department to provide for these stamp agencies.

They continue to refuse to establish the stations because they are required to sell money orders and registered letters and all that sort of thing. The people ought to have an opportunity to purchase stamps with the least possible inconvenience, when every 2-cent stamp sold is worth to the Government a profit of more than 1 cent, and they ought to give the people an opportunity to buy them.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. I hoped I would have gotten some information. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman did not ask

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to give the

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STAFFORD. To furnish the information called for by the gentleman from Illinois, and for that purpose I move to strike out the last two words. In justification of the committee for its action last year I wish to say that the committee desired to include in separate items the clerks in charge of contract stations and asked the Post-Office Department to furnish an estimate of the number of clerks in charge of those contract stations employed in the grades above and below $300, and acting upon the statement from the Post-Office Department the committee granted the estimate for those respective offices.

It subsequently appeared, after the passage of the bill, and it is no fault of the committee whatever, because it has not been intentionally niggardly in providing for these positions, which the committee believes, with the gentleman from Chicago, have performed a most useful service to the people at a minimum charge, that the Department furnished us an erroneous statement, and that it was made through mistake.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Have you given them this year all the amount called for in the estimates?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have given them all the Department has asked for.

Mr. HARDWICK. Are you satisfied that the Department asks for enough?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is now getting late, and I think if the gentleman will wait until I complete my answer he may find that I will cover his query.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman Geclines to yield?

Until I finish this gatement. In the item for clerks in charge of stations above the grade of $300, $211,200 is the annual rate of expenditure of those now employed. The committee in the appropriation for that service recommends $235,000, or an increase of nearly $25,000. Below the grade of $300 there are men in the service employed at total salaries of $457,000, and we make provision for $515,000, or a total increase of $125,000, which is all that the Department estimates. will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman thinks this service is so beneficent and that it is being administered in a niggardly manner, why does not the committee give more than the Department asks for?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I have tried to explain to the gentleman, the fact which he refers to of last year's appropriation was due to an erroneous estimate of the Post-Office Department. We made liberal appropriations then, as we supposed, relying upon that information; but it afterwards appeared that the Department had made a mistake. This year we make the full appropriation requested by the Department.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentlemen think, then, that the present appropriation is amply sufficient as carried in this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Amply sufficient, and we have given the full estimate of the Department.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Do you think the estimate is correct?

Mr. STAFFORD. As nearly as we can determine. Mr. HARDWICK. I move to strike out the last word.

I agree thoroughly with what my friend from Illinois has said on this subject. This substation service is one of the most beneficent branches of the service, and I want to say that I have had an immense amount of trouble in the largest city in my district, and one of the largest in Georgia, on this very question. The First Assistant Postmaster-General claims that the allowance made by this committee and by this House for the last fiscal year was absolutely insufficient to carry on this

I know that a very large substation in the city of Augusta, Ga., one of the largest substations in the South, that does a very large business, was very well run with an allowance of about $600 per annum, I think. It was moved two or three doors from the place of its original location, and because it was moved the First Assistant Postmaster-General reduced the compensation under the contract from about $600 to $100, and when a showing was made to him that the revenues from that substation and the amount of business handled by it were actually increasing instead of decreasing after the removal he said he was still helpless, because he did not have the money and could not get it. He has now assured me that if the Post-Office Committee will give him the amount that he asks for in his esti-mates he will be able to give the people in my district and in that city the service to which they are entitled.

I am glad to get the information from the gentleman that the committee have recommended this appropriation, because I know that in the larger cities, particularly, it is one of the most important and useful branches of the Post-Office Service.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the word "thirty-five" in

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may speak in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. MANN. The pending amendment is a pro forma one, and I propose to speak on a real amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not yet read that para-

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks in charge of contract stations, at a rate of compensation above $300 each, and not to exceed $1,000 each, $235,000.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "thirty-five," in line 20, and to insert the word "fifty" in place thereof, so that the appropriation for clerks in charge of contract stations will be $250,000 instead of $235,000. I am not disposed, Mr. Chairman, to criticise the committee

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "thirty-five" in line 20 and insert "fifty."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to criticise the committee for its action even if they opposed this amendment. The truth is whether what the committee has reported is what the Post-Office Department has recommended does not matter. If the Post-Office Department has so recommended, they have recommended an error. We depend on the substations in the large cities. There is no other way they can do the post-office business in the large cities. Gentlemen will remember that where there is a substation at a cost of one, three, or four hundred dollars a year doing a business of $10,000 a year perhaps, if it were in the country it would cost the Government 40 per cent of the receipts, whereas in this case it is not over 4 per cent.

Now, the Post-Office Department made a rule with reference to these promotions based on the amount of business that was transacted, and when on the 1st of July last a number of these stations reported, as of course they report all the time, the amount of business, and that was figured out by the Auditor to determine the amount of business, when it was known that the amount of business had actually increased, instead of being promoted from $400 to $500 they were demoted from $400 to $300 a year.

I do not care whether the Post-Office Department recommended it or not. Ever since I have been in the House I have been fighting the opposition of the First Assistant Postmaster-General and endeavoring to instruct them in reference to this matter. There isn't anybody there who knows anything about these stations; they do not come in contact with them; they are under the control of the postmasters and auditors, and I haven't seen anybody, from Mr. Waters down in his office, who had any conception of the work or the necessity of these substations in the large cities.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman what progress he has made in instructing the First Assistant Postmaster-General's office?

Mr. MANN. I have made considerable progress. The number of stations has been increased.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the gentleman think that there is room for improvement?

Mr. MANN. It is for the benefit of the Government to do this. If we could deal with the First Assistant Postmaster-General's office alone we could get a great deal better satisfaction than we do now; but the other offices insist that these men shall sell money orders, and you can not get a drug store to sell money orders, register letters, and sell stamps, and keep one person hired for that purpose at a cost of $800 a year and do it for $300 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want to say that we have increased the appropriations between $50,000 and $100,000 for this very service, and I hope the amendment will be disagreed

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman's statement was absolutely correct, I would say nothing, but what they have increased in this item is $10,000 over that of last year.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have the

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman had yielded the

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; I have not. Mr. MANN. The Chairman was about to put the question when I took the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois had expired and the gentleman from Indiana had yielded the floor, as the Chair understood.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the two paragraphs, this one and the one immediately following, provision is made over existing authorizations of $50,000 for this character of work. All of the appropriations for the current year have not been used in either one of these items. The purpose of the provision is to provide for the innumerable small stations throughout the various cities, at a fair compensation. There may be an instance where some individual may think he ought to have more money, but there is always a drug store or some other store perfectly willing to have the station located in its room. There is no trouble about it. We have had no difficulty in the past in the administration of it, and the gentleman from Illinois is the only Member I have known to interpose a criticism.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to add my criticism to that of the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Then there are two?
Mr. HARDWICK. I know this from my experience.
Mr. MANN. I presume there has been no trouble in the gentleman's city, but if he would come to my city he would see the trouble.

Mr. FINLEY. I would ask the chairman if the Department has found any trouble in providing for the taking charge of these stations:

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not understand so.

Mr. FINLEY. My understanding is they have not.
Mr. MANN. The trouble is in getting the stations and—
Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say, for the information of the gentleman from Indiana, that in the Back Bay section of the city of Boston, which is an important section, there has been for a long time a demand for extra stations of this character, and the postmaster of Boston has been unable to grant these demands because of a lack of the necessary funds. There is another instance to which wish to call the gentleman's attention.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I only know what the Department recommends.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 22,

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks in charge of contract stations, at a rate of compensation not to exceed $300 each, $515,000.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 24, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That in addition to the foregoing allowance and compensation of clerks and employees at first and second class post-offices there be allowed and paid to each a sum which, together with the allowance herein made, would equal 20 per cent upon the salary now fixed by law."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that, and I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio if he will withdraw his amendment and let me close up the first few lines on the next page then he can offer his amendment, and I will reserve the point of order and let it stand until to-morrow morning and be considered as pending.

Mr. GOEBEL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment temporarily.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $26,090,200.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 1, strike out $26,000,200 and insert $26,390,200.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOEBEL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio renews his

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order upon it.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Currier, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25483, the post-office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 25745) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second times, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order upon the bill,

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri reserves all points of order upon the bill.

ALLOTMENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5290 and ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bill, disagree with the Senate amendments thereto, and ask a conference. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (II. R. 5290) entitled "An act providing for the allotment and distribution of Indian tribal funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LACEY, Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, and Mr. ZENOR.

OMAHA, NEBR., February 19, 1907.

VICE-PRESIDENT FAIRBANKS,

Washington, D. C.

[Resolution introduced by Rev. G. W. Cromer, D. D., of Osceola, Nebr.]

To the President of the United States Senate:

The President of the United States Senate:

The Presbyterian Inter-Synodical Foreign Missionary Convention, Omaha, Nebr., February 19, 1907, representing fifteen synods of fifteen States, with 100 elected delegates from each synod, also 100 from the church at large, unanimously adopted the following resolution, with the request that it be read in the Senate of the United States before vote on case of REED SMOOT is taken:
Fully understanding the present teachings and practices of the Mormon organization, which in nowise differs from their past teachings and practices, we most earnestly request the Senate of the United States to exclude Reed Smoot, an apostle of the Mormon organization, from the Senate of the United States. We make this appeal in the interest of morality, the American home, and American citizenship. Furthermore, we expect all Senators to stand for a high standard of morals and against the polygamist régime of the Mormon hierarchy, which Smoot is in the Senate to represent, and to stand for his exclusion by their votes when his case is disposed of.

Mr. PILES. I present a memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the Record, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House memorial No. 1.

To the Congress of the United States:

House memorial No. 1.

To the Congress of the United States:

The legislature of the State of Washington herewith presents this memorial in respect to the improvement of the Columbia and Snake rivers and calls the attention of Congress to the following facts in support of the petition to be made:

1. Extent, resources, productions, and population of territory that will be opened by steamboat navigation to Kettle Falls, on the Columbia, and Lewiston, on the Snake.

Inspection of the map will show that a region of approximately a hundred thousand square miles is commercially tributary to the upper Columbia River and its branches. According to reports of the Agricultural Department, this region contains the most productive grain fields in the United States, while it is a matter of common knowledge that the horticultural, pastoral, forestry, and mineral resources of the section under consideration are surpassed by none and equaled by few in the United States.

It is estimated that one-tenth of the wheat of the United States is produced in this region. Conservative estimates of the amount of wheat and mill stuffs transported from the inland empire to the seaboard for some years past indicate about 40,000,000 bushels annually. A single county (Yakima) has exported in one year an amount of fruit and vegetables estimated at 3,000 carloads.

The capacity of the country to maintain population is sufficiently indicated by the rapid increase of a few years past. The Federal census of 1890 shows a population in eastern Washington of 120,450, while the population in 1905 is estimated by the State bureau of immigration at 339,079, a gain of nearly 300 per cent. Increase in eastern Oregon and Idaho is not far from the same. It would be safe to estimate the present population of eastern Oregon, eastern Washington, and northern Idaho at 600,000. The estimated valuation of the State of Washington at the present time is over $1,000,000,000, of which over a third is in the eastern part. The valuation of the inland empire may be sta competition.

A few figures will show the tremendous handleap under which this region labors in respect to freight rates. A comparison of all-rail rates with all-water rates up to January 1, 1907:

	Miles.	Classes.
		1.	2.	3.	4.	5.	A.	В.	C.	D.	E.
St. Louis to St. Paul by water St. Louis to Oklahoma City by rail Portland to Walla Walla by rail.	543	1.30	0. 521 1. 09 . 99	. 97	.84	. 67	. 65	. 53	.40	.37	.29
For short hauls up to Jar	uar	y 1,	190	7:				-		,

Classes. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. A. B. C. D. St. Louis to Hannibal by water. St. Louis to Centralia by rail... Walla Walla to Glenwood, 122 .70 .60 .49 .42 .35 .35 .28 .21 .18 Wash., by rail .....

The above figures show that the rates from Portland to Walla Walla were about four times as much as those by water on the Mississippi, and about twice as much as those by rail in the Mississippi Valley. Much of the same difference prevails between points in the inland empire not having water competition and those on the lower Columbia or Puget Sound.

For instance, we may compare rates from Portland to The Dalles, under water competition, with those from Portland to Umatilla, where there was no steamboat competition, as follows:

Rates per ton in carload lots.

	Miles.	Salt.	Sugar.	Canned goods.	Grain,
Portland to The Dalles	88	$1.50	$2.00	$2,00	$1.50
	187	7.50	10.20	10,20	3.00

The local rates given in both the above tables were somewhat reduced by changes going into effect on January 1, 1907, as a result of the competition of the Portage Railway at Cellio, and the steamboats running in connection with it, although the service was inadequate on account of rapids above Cellio.

3. Benefits accruing by reason of what has already been done toward opening the country to water competition:

The chief work thus far done is the Federal canal at the Cascades, between Portland and The Dalles. This canal opened but a relatively small region to seaboard connection—not a twentieth part of what will be opened by the Cellio Canal and the other improvements on the upper river. Nevertheless, it has had so marked an effect upon rates within the sphere of its operation as to constitute an overwhelming argument in favor of continued river improvement.

The following table exhibits the rates per ton in carload lots from Portland to The Dalles (88 miles) before and after the establishment of water competition through the Cascade Canal:

	Before.	After.
Salt Sugar Canned goods Nails Grain	$5, 20 6, 20 6, 20 6, 20 6, 20 2, 70	$1.50 2.00 2.00 2.00 2.00 1.50

In this connection and remembering that the country contiguous to the Cascade Canal is but a small fraction of the inland empire, the fol-lowing statement of traffic at the canal from January 1, 1905, to Oc-tober 31, 1905, is of value:

Number of lockages 1, 500 Tons of freight carried 30, 528 Passengers carried 111, 113 warrants the conclusion that the inland empire would save from four million to six million dollars every year by the complete improvements of an open river.

There might be a saving of $2,000,000 a year on wheat and its products alone. Congressman Joseph E. Ransdell, in an address before the Chamber of Commerce at Spokane on September 4, 1906, estimated that the region tributary to Spokane would save $6,000,000 yearly by the open rivers. Such saving would be effected not alone by steamboat traffic, but by the necessity imposed upon railroads to lower their own rates to meet water competition. The open river will be the great arbiter of rates. We ask you to note in this connection the important fact that electric railways, independent of the steam roads, are in process of construction or projected in and around Spokane, Walla Walla, Yakima, Pendleton, and Lewiston, which will reach river points and by cooperation with steamers will give independent connection with the seaboard. The steamboat and the trolley are complementary parts of one vast movement. But not alone is the pecuniary benefit of the open river of moment to our section. Even more important is the commercial independence to be secured. The inland empire is at present subject to the dictation of the great transportation lines. With free rivers we shall secure the greatest need of an American community—commercial freedom.

5. What the States concerned are doing.

We ask you to note this fact: The State of Oregon has already appropriated $190,000 for the construction and maintenance of the Portage Railway, and $100,000 for the right of way for the Cellio Canal. About $40,000 has been given by individuals in Oregon and Washington for the same ends. The State of Washington stands ready to cooperate with the Government in any way possible to aid in accomplishing the great task.

We ask the Congress to rest assured that the people of this State are alive to the vast benefits of the proposed work. We believe that while primarily of benefit to the Pacific Northwest, yet in view of the prospective commerce of the Pacific Ocean and the untold magnitude of the interests resulting therefrom, the opening of the Columbia River will be of immeasurable advantage to our entire nation.

6. The method of construction.

We wish to express in conclusion the sentiment that a single appropriation large enough to meet the estimated cost of the work would accomplish the needs far better than small appropriations, given from time to time, and measurably wasted through lack of continuity of plan. This work has already been favorably reported by Government engineers and by Secretary of the Treasury. Congress has already committed itself to the undertaking. Would it not be the best policy to accept the work and estimates of the competent engineers, place at the disposal of the department in charge a sufficient sum to complete it at once, and thus remove the matter from the domain of political action, and regard it a settled matter to be pressed to the speedlest possible conclusion? Is there any possible reason for spending time in considering it at each session of Congress and dragging it on from year to year, when the other policy might insure its completion within two or three years?

Moreover, the experience of the Government seems to prove conclusively that the contract system insures far more rapid and satisfactory results than any other. That method is employed on the Panama Canal. We earnestly hope that Congress will apply the same method to the improvement so fraught with advantage to the Pacific Northwest. It is safe to say that within three years at the most the saving on freights in the inland empire will more than counterbalance all the expense of making our great rivers navigable at all seasons throughout the major portion of their extent, and that means an amount of navigable water second only to the Mississippi among the river systems of the United States.

Your attention is furthermore called to the confessed inability of the railw contradiction.

In view of the facts presented above, your memorialists, the members of the legislature of Washington, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to consider favorably the appropriation of a sufficient sum to complete without interruption and at earliest date, by contract, the work of rendering the Columbia River to Kettle Falls and Snake River to Lewiston navigable for steamboats at all seasons of the year.

Sam. H. Nichols; Secretary of State, By Ben. R. Fish, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Framingham, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called "Crumpacker bill," relating to postal fraud orders; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of 27 citizens of Newburyport, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Boston, Worcester, and Haverhill, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present denatured-alcohol law; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on the conclusion of the vote, under the unanimous-consent agreement, that is to be taken at 4 o'clock, I shall ask the Senate to go into executive session.

Mr. HALE. I do not want the notice of the Senator to be considered as in any way cutting out the pending appropriation bill, that has already taken three days. We ought to finish it before going to anything else. However, I am willing to leave that entirely to the condition of things when the special order is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I do not desire to delay the appropriation bill, but it is necessary that we should have an executive session for a few moments. I do not think it will delay the bill materially

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed; and the Chair, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement of January 30, lays before the Senate the resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 142, reported by Mr. Burrows, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as fol-

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. DUBOIS obtained the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before any debate is had today on the resolution I should like to have some arrangement made with the senior Senator from Michigan with reference to the division of time.

What understanding would the Senator Mr. BURROWS. like to have?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to have the time equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. I should hardly think that would be proper. I had thought that I might have the privilege of closing the debate, and I should like to have an hour and a half. I should judge from what I know of those who expect to speak that there will be ample time for all, leaving that time for my-

Mr. HOPKINS. How many speakers will there be on the side of the resolution?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know.

Mr. HOPKINS. As to the arrangement about closing the debate, I have no objection to that, but there are several Senators who want to speak, and unless we have an arrangement in advance they might be crowded out of their time.

Mr. BURROWS. Any arrangement will be satisfactory to

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest, then-

Mr. President-Mr. BACON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to make a suggestion. There ought to be such an arrangement of time as would give almost anyone who might wish to say a few words an opportunity so to do. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan that he should be allowed ample time to conclude the case is entirely a reasonable and proper one. I suppose that will be generally conceded. I do not know how it may be with all Senators, but I suppose the large majority of them would simply desire a very short time in order that their position may not be misunder-For myself I will not desire over ten or fifteen minutes, and I think the time ought to be so divided that those who desire to briefly express the reasons for their votes may have the opportunity so to do.

We have had several weeks of time in which Senators who had extended remarks to make possibly had an opportunity so to do. How many there may be who to day desire to make extended remarks I do not know, and I am only interested to this extent, that there may be such limitation of time, at least as to a part of the time, that those of us who may desire to say a very few words may have the use of it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is generally understood that upon a subject such as the one here involved, or any matter of large importance, the members of the committee having it in charge shall have the first opportunity-and that is very proper and in the interest of the Senate-to make an exposition of their The debate thus far has been confined, I think, solely, except as to the speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] to the members of the committee. I think the chairman of the committee ought to close the debate, and he ought to have ample time; but there are a number of Senators-and I am included in that number-who desire to briefly explain the vote which they intend to cast on this matter, and it ought to be arranged in some way, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, so as to afford that opportunity. It is a matter of very grave concern; it is a matter which has created very great and almost universal interest in the country, and a matter as to which, I think, a very great deal of prejudice has been engendered in one way and another. I wish briefly to explain my position upon it, and I think other Senators wish to do the same, and they ought to have an opportunity.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER.

Certainly.

I think there will be no difficulty whatever Mr. BURROWS. about it. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] advises me that he will not take more than thirty minutes, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] does not care to speak. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] says he will not occupy over thirty minutes, or three-quarters of an hour at the most. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] will desire to occupy half an hour or more perhaps

Mr. DUBOIS. Not more.

Mr. BURROWS. And the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSEROUGH] thirty minutes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to the Senator from Michigan that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver] desires to have twenty or thirty minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes. It seems to me that all who desire to talk can be accommodated and leave me an hour and a half for such close of the debate as I may desire to make.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the more equitable way would be a division of the time.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Michigan that if many Senators are to occupy half an hour there will certainly not be much opportunity for those who desire ten or fifteen minutes. A number of Senators may wish to say briefly a few words while other Senators may have made preparation for addresses. The Senator from Indiana I understand desires to speak, and the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very briefly.
Mr. BURROWS. May I make a suggestion?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. We are losing valuable time. The Senator from Idaho has been recognized, and suppose we hear him now, and in the meantime we will see what arrangement can be made.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the more equitable way of adjusting this matter would be right now, before we embark on the debate at all, to divide the time equally. The Senator from Michigan and those who favor the resolution can divide the two hours and a quarter that they have in such a manner as they may see fit, and those who are opposed to the resolution can divide the time amongst the Senators who desire to express themselves against the resolution. I think if we make an agreement that the time shall be divided in that way we can among ourselves apportion the time without any trouble.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Michigan would leave only twenty-five minutes for all the Senate outside of those whom he has enumerated as intending to speak, and the time that he has stated would be approximately consumed by them. I do not think that is a fair proposition.

Mr. BURROWS. I renew my suggestion that the Senator from Idaho be permitted to proceed, and in the meantime we will make some arrangement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the time between the present and 4 o'clock, when we are to vote on the resolution and the amendments, be equally divided between the opponents and the friends of the resolution, and that the Senator from Michigan control the time in favor of the resolution on his side.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I object. I will very gladly yield my time to the Senator from Illinois or any other one who desires to speak on that side of the question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that he does not confer any favor upon me at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not want any of the time that is allowed to the other side, and I do not make the suggestion to get any time to speak. I have spoken already on this subject, and I am content to stand upon the record that I have made; but there are members of the Senate who have not been heard upon this side.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded by the Senator from Maine. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. By the favor of the Senator, though I rose to address the Chair before in my own right, I object to the proposition made on the other side. I do not know whether it has been accepted or not. I do not know whether anyone can accept it; but I object to any proposition that permits any Senator to farm out any time whatever. Let him speak in his own time as much as he pleases to speak, and then let him take his seat. I object to any such proposition. It is a system that obtains in the House, where they have no parliamentary law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will pro-

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I have listened with much amazement to the speeches of the Senators who have advocated that the Senator from Utah should retain his seat. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Horkins], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], spoke as technical lawyers. They treated this case as though the Senator from Utah was on trial for horse stealing. They resorted to all the methods, I should think, known to those who are trying a lawsuit on technical grounds. Apparently they mistook the charges which were preferred against the Senator from Utah. They insisted on trying him for being a polygamist, a charge not made against him.

Our contention is that the Mormon Church as an organization is so un-American, so lawbreaking, and law defying that he, on account of his position in it, is not fit to represent, he does not possess the qualification to represent, the people of the United States in this Chamber. These lawyer Senators misstated facts. They may not have known that they did, because it is plain that they are not familiar with the testimony or, if familiar, purposely ignored facts which bore directly on the subject. I will point out some of these facts and their misstatements.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] pictured the Mormon organization as better than any other church in the coun-No one could have listened to his speech, no one can read his speech, without coming to the conclusion that that organization, in his opinion, is superior to the other Christian organizations of the country, and he became sponsor—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. DUBOIS. I will not yield. Neither the Senator from Illinois nor any of the Senators on that side would yield to me. will not allow my time-

Mr. HOPKINS. I say the Senator should not misrepresent

It is an absolute misrepresentation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. He absolutely misrepresents me.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not misrepresent the Senator. I repeat that no one who heard the Senator from Illinois or who will read his speech can come to any other conclusion than that he holds this organization as better than the other Christian organizations of the land, and he became sponsor for the head of this organization. I call attention to this, which the Senator from Illinois said in his speech. On page 30, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] asked him:

Is there any reason why they should continue to cohabit with them [their plural wives] and increase the number of the offspring?

The Senator from Illinois answered:

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that on that proposition I will give him the answer of the head of the Mormon Church, which is found in the evidence.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, read the next sentence. Mr. DUBOIS. I am reading the next sentence.

This is what you said next:

It is not necessary for me to make an answer to that proposition.

That very question was put to the head of the Mormon Church, who has had a number of children born since the manifesto, and I submit that answer, not only to the Senator, but to Senators in this body and to the public generally.

I am quoting literally, and now I will quote the answer of the president of the church, which the Senator from Illinois has made his answer. You will find this on pages 334, 335, and 336 of volume 1 of the testimony. The Senator from Michigan asked him precisely the same question he asked the Senator from Illinois. The chairman of the committee said to Mr. Smith, the president of the Mormon Church:

The Chairman. Why is it necessary, in order to support your children, educate, and clothe them, that you should continue to have children by a multiplicity of wives?

Mr. SMITH. Because my wives are like everybody else's wife.

The Chairman. I am not speaking of them.

Mr. SMITH. I understand.

The Chairman. I am speaking of the children now in existence born to you.

The CHAIRMAN. I am speaking of the children now in existence born to you.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Why is it necessary to continue to have issue by five wives in order to support and educate the children already in existence? Why is it necessary?

Mr. SMITH. It is only to the peace and harmony and good will of myself and my wives; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you could educate your children and clothe them and feed them without having new issue?

Mr. SMITH. Well, yes; I possibly could, but that is just exactly the kernel in the nut.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I have chosen not to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. You have chosen not to do it?

Mr. SMITH. That is it. I am responsible before the law for my action.

action.

The Chairman. And in not doing it, you are violating the law?

Mr. Smith. The law of my State?

The Chairman. Yes.

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator Overman. Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?

Mr. Smith. It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.

Senator Overman. Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Senator Overman. If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?

Mr. Smith. I have admitted that, Mr. Senator, a great many times here.

That is the answer of the Senator from Illinois as given by the head of the church. I trust he is contented with it.

There was a colloquy which took place during the speech of the Senator from Illinois. I want to show the misstatements, the misrepresentations, the subterfuges which have been resorted to by these special pleaders for their client. I call attention to this colloquy in the speech of the Senator from Illinois, on pages 32 and 33:

Mr. Dubois. I will ask the Senator from Illinois, if he will allow me, if the Mormon Church has undertaken to punish any of these polygamists for entering into this adulterous relation?

The Senator from Illinois answered at length, and finally, addressing me, said:

Has he gone and presented these charges to the grand jury in the State of Utah or in Salt Lake City?

Mr. DUBOIS. I myself have not.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all I want to know.

Mr. DUBOIS. But the people of Utah have gone, and the courts of Utah have paid no attention to the presentation, and it is useless.

Then the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] took part, and the following colloquy occurred:

Then the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveride] took part, and the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. Beveride. In answer to the Senator's question, whether the Senator from Illinois could cite an instance where there had been any punishment by another Mormon of Mormons for having entered into polygamous relations, I have not read the testimony recently, but the Senator has, and I call his attention to a case, as I remember it, when I was present when the testimony was being taken. I believe it was a bishop of a stake by the name of Harmer, who had taken another wife, and the attention of the Senator from Utah, not then a Senator, was called to it. The bishop himself went to Provo, the home of the Senator from Utah, not then a Senator, and told him about this thing, about which there was a great deal of rumor. The upshot of the whole matter, as I remember the testimony—and the Senator from Illinois will know about what it was—was that on his way home from Provo this bishop of the stake, who had entered into relationships with more than one woman, was arrested by the sheriff, was by the church authorities deposed from the bishopric, and was prosecuted and finally sent to the penitentiary. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but that is as I remember it.

Mr. DULLINGHAM. He himself testified to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Vermont suggests that it was the bishop himself who testified to that fact.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me, I will show the difference. Bishop Harmer was not married to the second woman. He was living with her in a purely adulterous relation. Therefore the Mormon Church made an example of him. Had she been married to him as a second wife, they would not have interfered, because they never have done so.

Mr. Beveridge. Then, the Senator's suggestion is—

Mr. HOPKINS. I have shown, Mr. President, that there can not be in the Mormon Church to-day the taking of a plural wife. That is an impossibility under the law of the church, and the relation is an adulter swer is that the reason why they deposed him from his religious office and the reason why they sent him to the penitentiary for a criminal offense is that he did not marry the woman.

Mr. DUBOIS. Exactly; precisely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Then came the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who should know; and I desire to say, in passing, that the only speech approaching fairness was made by the junior Senator from Utah. He would not have dared utter what these Senators have on this floor. He knew the facts and they did not, and he would not have made the utterly unwarranted statements which they have. I pay that tribute to him in passing. But in this case he misled, as I will show.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] said:

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, I will state that I am pretty familiar with the Harmer case referred to, although I do not now recall precisely what the evidence showed about it. Mr. Harmer was a bishop in the county in which my colleague lives. It was very clearly shown when he was arrested that he had gone to Mexico and had married his plural wife there.

In addition to what the other Senators said, that is what the Senator from Utah said.

My contention was this, and it is this now: That no Mormon has ever prosecuted any other Mormon for living in the polygamous relation. No Mormon dared do it. In this case they prosecuted this Mormon because me was living in an adulterous relation with a woman not his wife. I defy them to point to a single instance where any member of the church has prosecuted any other member of the church for living in this polygamous relation. I will call attention to the testimony in this case. Notwithstanding all the Senators said that the testimony showed that Harmer was married to this woman, here is the testimony of Lorin Harmer himself:

estimony of Lorin Harmer himself:

Mr. Tayler. How many wives have you?
Mr. Harmer. Two.
Mr. Tayler. What are their names?
Mr. Harmer. Ellen and Ida.
Mr. Harmer. Ellen and Ida?
Mr. Harmer. How old is Ida?
Mr. Harmer. How old is Ellen?
Mr. Harmer. How old is Ellen?
Mr. Harmer. How name before she was married?
Mr. Harmer. Her name was Ellen Tew.
Mr. Tayler. Do you know Ellen Anderson?
Mr. Harmer. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Are you married to her?
Mr. Harmer. No, sir.
Mr. Tayler. No, sir.
Mr. Tayler. No, sir; not as a wife.
Mr. Harmer. No, sir; not as a wife.
Mr. Tayler. How many?
Mr. Harmer. How many?
Mr. Harmer. How many?
Mr. Harmer. How many since you were in the penitentiary?
Mr. Harmer. One.
Mr. Tayler. One
Mr. Tayler. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. One
Mr. Harmer. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. You were sent to the penitentiary for having children y her?
Mr. Harmer. Yes, sir. Mr. TAYLER. You were sent to the pentientiary for havin by her?
Mr. HARMER. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. Where does she live now?
Mr. HARMER. She lives in Springville.
Mr. TAYLER. You do not live with her as a wife?
Mr. HARMER. No, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. When did you have the last child by her?
Mr. HARMER. I do not know as I could tell you exactly.
Mr. TAYLER. About when?
Mr. HARMER. Oh, perhaps a year or a year and a half ago.

That is in volume 1, pages 501 and 502, of the testimony. They undertook to prove that REED SMOOT had this Mormon arrested and sent to the penitentiary for living in the polygamous relation. It is the only case that they attempted to prove, and the witness himself says he was not married to her. He had two wives besides. They made no move against him for living with these two wives, which he had taken as a member of the church and according to the doctrines of the church. This is absolutely not only the best showing but the only showing they made or could make that Apostle Senator Reed the church of the church. Smoot has attempted to punish anyone for polygamous living, or of objecting to anyone for living in the polygamous relation.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland] eulogized in extravagant language his colleague. The junior Senator from Utah, I have been told by a great many of the most splendid men in Utah, and his friends and party associates, opposed strenuously the election of Reed Smoot to the Senate on the ground that he was an apostle of the church. That is current history there. The junior Senator says that the church has dictated in politics; that it has controlled all political matters there; that the president of the church and the church elected his predecessor, Senator Kearns, but that it stopped when it reached Reed Smoot and himself. Since they reached these gentlemen there has been no dictation in politics, although, according to the junior Senator, they elected his immediate predecessor. That is in his speech. He draws a Utopian picture of political conditions in Utah. I wish it were true. He says political conditions have been growing better and better all the time. Why is it, if that is true, that they have been compelled to organize out there an American party, composed of all the Gentiles of Salt Lake City, 80 per cent of whom are Republicans? These Gentile Republicans have abandoned all hopes of political preferment, either Federal or State. They have abandoned their party, which is the dominant party in the State and nation. They suffer in their business on account of this fight they are making there for American and Republican principles.

You can not pass it by or explain it away by saying that Tom Kearns is at the head of this party, and that he is all there is to it. This party carried Salt Lake City in the last two elections. As Salt Lake City grows the party will grow, and it is extending all over the State. These Americans are the very first citizens. They would be a most welcome addition to any community in the United States. No people anywhere are superior to them in all that goes to make grand characters.

The conditions have arisen and this American party has arisen since the church selected Apostle Smoor as a Senator from Utah. That was the occasion for the beginning of this party. The time had come when the Gentiles must assert themselves and unitedly oppose the absolute domination of this hierarchy in political affairs.

There is a great deal of testimony in regard to the political domination of the church. The Senator from Utah had to receive the consent of the president of the church before he could become a candidate for Senator. He himself so testified, and so did the president of the church. Yet these technical lawyers undertake to explain that by calling this consent a "leave of absence." There is no such word in the order issued by the church compelling every Mormon official, from a bishop up, to receive the consent of the president of the church before he can become a candidate for an office. The technical lawyer Senators have invented the phrase "they must receive a leave of absence." Brigham H. Roberts, an official of the church immediately under the apostles, who was refused a sent in the other branch of Congress, testified a little in regard to this political domination of the hierarchy. Senator Overman interrogated him as a witness:

Senator Overman. Suppose there is a conflict, is your church the first duty, or the state?

That seemed like a simple question.

Mr. Roberts. That is hypothetical. I can not tell what I would do. Senator Bailey. It would depend somewhat on your frame of mind. One time you did defy the church, as I understand it, out there? Mr. Roberts. I did, to some extent. Senator Bailey. But they beat you that time? * * * I mean you were defeated at the polls * * * when you did not submit to the discipline of the church.

Mr. Roberts. Yes, sir.
Senator Bailey. Then the next time, when you did submit, you were chosen.

Mr. Roberts. Yes, sir. (I: 725-728.)

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Roberts, I want to ask you a question right in the line of those Senator Balley has propounded to you. If you were invited by your fellow-citizens and your party to accept the nomination for an office, would you feel at liberty to accede to that request until you had first consulted with the church?

Mr. Roberts. Not unless I resigned my position in the church.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you feel at liberty to accept without first consulting the church?

Mr. Roberts. No, sir; I think not. (I: 734.)

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] asked a number of times, and so did the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge]. I think, although I am not sure about that, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] why we did not prosecute these men under the law. Here are a few choice extracts bearing on that. Mr. Tayler asked the president of the church:

What inquiry did you make to find out whether Abraham H. Cannon, one of the twelve apostles of the church, had made a plural marriage? Mr. SMITH. I made no inquiry at all. Mr. TAYLER. Did you set on foot any inquiry? Mr. SMITH. No, sir; not myself.

Mr. TAYLER. Did you have any interest in finding out whether there had been.

Mr. SMITH. Not the least. (I :476-477.)

The chairman of the committee said to President Smith:

The CHAIRMAN. * * * In any instance where you have learned that these high officials, or anyone else, have been guilty of plural marriage, or of performing a ceremony of that kind, since 1890, have you made inquiry into it? * * * Mr. SMITH. No, sir; because it has not been my business. (1: 478.)

Senator Hoar said to Mr. Jenson, one of the high officials of the church and the custodian of the records: If any Mormon, having heard Mr. Smith's testimony here, were to go back to Utah and swear that he heard him say that here and insist on his being prosecuted, he would do an act which would be odious to all good Mormons, would he not? That is the feeling, is it not?

Mr. JENSON. I think so. Yes, I think so. (I: 536.) Here is Francis M. Lyman's testimony. Senator Hoar said

You have said more than once that in living in polygamous relations with your wives, which you do and intend to do, you knew that you were disobeying this revelation. * * * And that in disobeying this revelation you were disobeying the law of God?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar. Very well. So that you say that you, an apostle of your church, expecting to succeed, if you survive Mr. Smith, to the office in which you will be the person to be the medium of Divine revelations, are living and are known to your people to live in disobedience of the law of the land and of the law of God?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir. (1: 8430.)

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham]said in his speech that one Charles Mostyn Owen as a witness said that speech that one Charles Mostyn Owen, as a witness, said that Taylor was reputed to have taken new wives since the manifesto, but that there was no evidence to support it. for granted that the Senator from Vermont forgot the testimony of Mr. Abbott, a Mormon, who lives in the same town with Apostle Taylor, who testified that Taylor had five wives and that two of these wives were sisters-Rhoda and Roxie Welling—one 22 and the other 24 years of age, which would have made one of them 8 years old and the other 10 when the manifesto was issued in 1890. Mr. Abbott was sheriff of Davis County, in which he and Apostle Taylor lived.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] said that Tanner, Cowley, Taylor, and Grant are fugitives from justice. They were fugitives from a subpæna of the Senate because two of them had taken plural wives since the manifesto. They evaded a subpoena of the Senate. They fled and kept in hiding to avoid testifying before the Senate committee, as did many more valuable Mormon witnesses. They are no longer fugitives When you seat Apostle Smoot, as you will, they will appear on the streets of Salt Lake City, because they are in Utah now. Tanner walks the streets these days and Cowley and Taylor will to-morrow. They were not evading the law, because they are not afraid of the law in Utah, so far as these crimes are concerned.

If the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland], with his splendid legal ability, should go back and, following up his denunciation of Apostles Cowley and Taylor, should undertake to prosecute them for entering into polygamy since the manifesto and to send them to the penitentiary, he would never be elected a Senator of the United States again from the State of Utah, nor could anyone in or out of the church attempt it and survive politically. No member of the church ever attempted it or ever will. They have not brought a single line of proof to show that the members of the church anywhere oppose it.

Everyone understands, of course, that the courts and all the offices in Utah are dominated by the Mormon Church. No one can be elected to any office if it is opposed to him. It is impossible to have any enforcement of the law with the church

I find that I will have to hurry along. I must not trespass upon the time of other Senators. I should like the Senate to know, however, some of the misstatements which these learned lawyers have made, and understand, partially at least, the technical defense which they have entered into. They have deceived not only the Senate, but the public, because they have not spoken from the testimony. I will have to pass over a great deal that I should like to speak of, but I will refer to the speech of Senator Knox. On page 12 of his speech the Senator from Pennsylvania said:

I find upon an examination of the Articles of Faith of the Mormon Church and its book of doctrines and covenants that the Mormon doctrine relating to human governments and the duties of citizenship is set out in great detail.

And then he proceeds to read from the doctrines and covenants. I interjected and asked him if they were the same now as they always were. That interjection is not in the copy of his speech which I have, but the Senator will recall it. He finally said that they were. He quotes what they say about obeying the laws of the land in their doctrines and covenants and says that those doctrines and covenants are now the same as they were then.

I wonder why the Senator did not put in also from these same doctrines and covenants the law relating to polygamy. It is there, just the same as the other, and is as follows:

If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him, for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth unto him and to no one else.

And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him; therefore is he justified.

You will not find the manifesto promulgated by Wilford Woodruff in 1890 in the doctrines and covenants. It has not been incorporated nor made a part of any church document which is exhibited by Mormons as authority.

Under the same doctrines and covenants of the Mormon Church they committed the Mountain Meadow massacre. Under the same doctrines and covenants under which they now living they defied this Government and compelled the United States to send an army to Utah to bring them in accord with the laws of the land. They are the same doctrines and covenants now as they always were, and they are being lived up to according to the direction of the head of the Mormon Church the same now as they always were.

On page 28 of the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania-

I quote him literally-he said:

Polygamous marriages have ended in Utah.

Neither of the Senators from Utah said that. No other Senator would say that who has read the testimony and wanted to interpret it correctly or who knew the facts. Senator from Utah in his speech did not say that, or anything that sounded like it. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania would have done well to have rehearsed with the junior Senator from Utah before making such statements as those

We proved here in the committee that five out of the twelve apostles have gone into new polygamy since the manifesto. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that polygamous marriages have ended; that there have been none. The junior Senator from Utah in his speech, pages 41 and 42, "In this list of new polygamists there are five apostlesdale, Abraham H. Cannon, Merrill, Taylor, and Cowley." dismisses Teasdale and Merrill by saying that he did not think the proof was quite sufficient. I will let that go. But in reference to Abraham H. Cannon he said: "Abraham H. Cannon was an apostle and married a plural wife in 1896."

The testimony shows to the satisfaction of every Gentile in Utah and Idaho that Joseph F. Smith, the president of the Mormon church, performed that marriage ceremony in 1896 between an apostle of the church and a fourth wife, he then being the president of the church.

In regard to Cowley and Taylor, who are also apostles, the junior Senator from Utah said:

I have absolutely no doubt in my own mind that both those apostles have taken plural wives since the manifesto, and I think there are no words in the English language that are sufficiently severe with which to condemn their conduct.

They resigned as apostles one week before the vote was taken on the Smoot case in the committee. The church had not proceeded against them; the junior Senator from Utah will not proceed against them; no one will proceed against them. You can not convict them in Utah because the whole power to prosecute is lodged in the Mormon Church.

In the case of Mable Kennedy, who was married to a man named Johnson in 1897, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DIL-LINGHAM], if I recall his testimony correctly, said this marriage was performed by some minor officer of the church who probably did not know that Johnson had another wife. The testimony shows that the other wife and a child of the other wife went with Mable Kennedy and Johnson to this town where they were married, and the testimony further shows that Brigham Young, as apostle of the Mormon Church, performed the marriage ceremony. All of this testimony will be found in volume 1, page 390.

I regret that I will have to pass on quickly. The Senator from Pennsylvania also said, on pages 29 and 30—and in this he takes a fling at the Christian ministers and the Christian women of the country, and, with biting sarcasm, refers to their phrase "the sanctity of the home." The Senator from Penn-

I do not see how the sanctity of the American home is at stake in this issue. If the Mormon Church teaches polygamy and encourages its practice, surely the fact that Senator Smoot is a monogamist and has from his youth up set his face and lifted up his voice against polygamy is conclusive evidence that he is fighting by precept and example for the sanctity of the American home against his church and under circumstances requiring the greatest moral courage.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Sena-The Senator from Vermont [MI. Dilated and the tor from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] repeat that from his youth the tor from Utah has been opposed to polygamy. That will Senator from Utah has been opposed to polygamy. That will be wonderful news to the people of Utah, both Mormon and Gentile—from his youth up!

Senator Smoor is the son of a polygamist. His father had four wives, and he was raised in this polygamous atmosphere with polygamous half brothers and sisters. When he reached the age of manhood he married a polygamous child, his wife being the daughter of the fourth wife of her father. I do not say this in disparagement to them: It is a badge of distinction for them in Utah. It does not interfere with their social standing in the slightest degree. I would not say it if it hurt the feelings of the Senator from Utah, but it does not. Few in Utah will blame him for that; many, most, will honor him for it. That was his youth. He is an apostle of the Mormon

No one can be preferred in that church unless he obeys the council and unless he gives implicit obedience to his leaders. Most of those leaders have been polygamists. Every president of that church has been a polygamist, and Reed Smoot was so obedient and so devoted to the church teachings and so faithful to counsel and precept of the leaders that finally he was made an apostle of the church.

As trustee of Provo Academy, a Mormon institution of learning for young men and women, he allowed Bishop Cluff, jr., to remain the president of that academy after he knew, as he himself testified, that Bishop Cluff, jr., had gone into new polygamy since the manifesto. The testimony of Cluff is in the record; the testimony of George Reynolds, whose daughter he married, is there. When Cluff resigned George H. Brimhall was appointed president of the academy. He was a polygamist; and Reed Smoot was a trustee of that academy and knew that Brimhall was a polygamist when he was appointed. Smoot testified to this himself. He sat among the apostles when Penrose was made an apostle, knowing him to be a polygamist.

That is in the testimony. And I defy any of these Senators to point to any single utterance in public or any single act of REED SMOOT by which he attempted in the slightest degree to suppress polygamy or to put his seal of condemnation on polygamous living. It exists only in the imagination of these gentlemen. There is no record of it anywhere. All his life, all his acts, all his teachings are to the contrary. Occasionally a suppliant Jack-Mormon, to curry favor with the church, will say things, as these Senator lawyers who are defending the mostle de which no orthodox Mormon would say apostle do, which no orthodox Mormon would say.

Mr. President, I am admonished that I must not take up much more time. I desire to put this in the RECORD, so that Senators can read it after they have voted at any rate. It will be a monument there. It will be something for you to look back at. In my judgment, there are not ten Senators in this body who would vote to retain REED SMOOT in his seat if they had carefully read the testimony. I know that strong influences are at work to retain him in his seat.

For the first time the Mormon question has been made a political one. The President of the United States is an open friend of the Senator from Utah. You all know country knows it. The President wants him seated. You Republicans join with the President in wanting the Mormon vote. You have got it. They are with you; you have every one of them, my friends on the Republican side of the Chamber. But it has cost you the moral support of the Christian women and men of the United States. I hardly think you can afford to pay the price for this temporary political advantage.

In my State of Idaho to-day, in the legislature, the Gentiles have united against the aggression of the Mormon bishops in the legislature.

As illustrative of their methods which have been brought so clearly to the attention of the Gentile members of the legislature, I will read an extract from a pro-Mormon paper in Idaho, the Lewiston Tribune, as follows:

MORMONS ALL VOTE TOGETHER.

Upon bills of minor importance the Democrats and insurgents have split up, each man voting his individual views. One or two times the Democrats have divided squarely, also the Republicans, but not the Mormons. On no measure, however slight in its importance, have they divided. On every roll call they have voted as a unit. No matter what the motion, measure, or subject under examination, it is shown all the Mormons vote in the same column. No individuality is shown at any time. The vote always and everlastingly is the same. The record of the house will show this to be a fact. All other creeds, religious and political, change from time to time, but not so with the Mormons. United and solid as one man, the vote of the Mormon Church is always unvarying, always alike; as the first Mormon on the list votes, you can wager all your possessions in safety that others will vote the same way. It would be no surprise to see the insurgents recognized as the regulars before the end of the session, and the stalwarts being placed in the position of refusing to follow the party in carrying out its platform pledges.

The insurgents are Republicans who have joined with the

The insurgents are Republicans who have joined with the Democrats against the Mormons and their Republican allies.

There are thirty-nine Republican members of the legislature (lower branch), thirteen of whom are Mormon bishops, leaving twenty-six Gentile Republicans and twelve Democratic members. Nineteen of the Gentile Republicans have joined with the twelve Democrats in opposition to the Mormons and their allies. These Gentile members, who compose the majority in the house now, have passed the Idaho "test oath," which the Mormons and their allies bitterly opposed, the Mormons claiming that its passage would disfranchise them. The "test oath" simply embodies the pledges which are made in the manifesto, and if the Mormons are sincere and are living up to the manifesto every one of them can take the "test oath."

The last campaign in Idaho was waged on the Mormon issue alone, the Republicans claiming that there was nothing in it. that the Mormons did not dominate in political affairs, and that there was no polygamy, etc. Notwithstanding the fact that Idaho is very strongly Republican, as much so as Vermont or Pennsylvania, they elected their governor and the legislature the last time solely on account of the solidity of the Mormon vote; and I will say that it does not take much of a prophet to foretell that the Gentile Republicans in the legislature who have joined with the Democrats there, and those of their party who agree with them throughout the State, will be sufficiently powerful in the next Republican convention to control that party in Idaho and force it to make a plain and unmistakable stand against the domination of this organization in politics. The Republican party is almost invincible there, and these Republicans will control it; or if they do not, they will beat the Republican party in Idaho.

It has been stated a number of times that the women of the country did not know what they were doing in sending these petitions there. There is not a petition signed by any one of them claiming that Reed Smoot is a polygamist. The women of this country have had their missionaries in Utah and Idaho and Wyoming for years and years. The ministers of the other denominations are there, hundreds of them, and there is not one of all these missionaries or ministers who does not say the same thing. If the defense could have gotten any Christian minister or Christian missionary to come here and testify that the conditions are not as they were disclosed in the testimony, and as charged by those protesting against Reed Smoot, it would have won their case for them; but they could not find one. Every one of these Christian men and women plead that you do not allow this apostle of polygamy to retain his seat.

The whole Christian testimony corroborates what has been shown in the Senate committee testimony, and the Christian moral feeling represented by the ministers and women of this country is entitled at least to respectful consideration should not be dismissed with a sneer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, one thing is dearer than life—the approval of one's own conscience. A second thing is nearly as precious—the good opinion of one's fellow-men. Riches, power, and birth are worse than worthless without reputation.

No wrong is blacker than the ruin of reputation of man or woman whose life has been stainless. No public policy can justify the damnation of a man by his countrymen upon error. And, where liberty reigns, truth will vindicate the wronged one

This is the fact, even though millions, misinformed, clamor against a man. Only the other day, as history goes, the world beheld a nation that has led most of the charges for freedom in modern times demanding, almost with a single voice, the worse than death of one falsely accused. Out of France's forty millions one man cried out for justice. But, for the hour, the misguided millions worked their will, and Dreyfus's epaulets of honor were torn from his shoulders, his sword was broken, and, amid roars of hatred, he was marched to disgrace.

But justice was not permanently defeated. Justice is never permanently defeated anywhere. Justice finally won for Dreyfus in France; and only yesterday, as history runs, that wronged officer of the French Republic was restored amid the huzzas of the nation which, unwittingly, had wronged him. THE CHARGES AGAINST THE ACCUSED.

Is not this something like the situation in America to-day? Dreyfus was charged with treason; and this man is charged with treason-and worse. He is charged with treason before this high court-for, in cases like this, the Senate is a court, nothing but a court, the highest court this world has ever known.

And he is charged with infamy, as well as treason, before the American people; before the bar of public opinion he has been tried on the charge of the vilest of offenses.

And because the American people have been made to believe this infamy, they have petitioned this court for judgment This fact is important, for who can say against the guiltless. what has been the influence on the members of this court of that clamor which has assailed us, a clamor as erroneous as that which sent the loyal French Jew to Devils Island?

THE "RIGHT OF PETITION."

Mr. President, I believe in the right of petition. It is higher than a constitutional right—it is institutional. It reigns wherever reigns our race. In the broad and generic and not in the narrow and partisan sense, I am a democrat to the bone. With all my soul I believe that "the voice of the people is the voice of God"—the final and informed voice of the people, not their first gusts of passion; the instructed wisdom of the common mind, not its error-inflamed demands. And in matters of legislation, unless it involves violation of conscience, I shall always obey the last word of the people, based on their knowledge of all the facts, but never their first word if based on their knowledge of none of the facts.

But the right of petition is not to the courts. What would the most violent friend of a litigant think of a judge that would listen to his appeal or the appeals of thousands? He would despise him for deciding his way. And why? Because the court hears the evidence and has taken oath to decide on that evidence and the law, and on nothing else. Justice is pictured as blindblind to prejudice, blind to passion, blind to ignorance, blind to interest. Justice sees only the evidence and the law. That is the only distinction between the judgments of courts of liberty on the one hand and the edicts of tyrants or the decrees of mobs on the other hand. And, in a case like this, this Senate is a court—the highest court beneath that eternal Tribunal which sits not only on the deeds, but on the consciences and most secret thoughts of men.

SENATOR HOAR'S OPINION.

And yet this case has been tried before the country on one issue-that of infamy; and before this court on another-that of treason. On our oaths, as judges of this supremest of earthly tribunals, we must try the second. On our responsibilities as public men let us examine the first. And on this I can not but recall the letter written by that noble American, a member of this committee, shortly before his death, to a minister who had been his life-long friend and had written this splendid states-man to condemn this man. In answer to that letter, Senator Hoar, of blessed memory, wrote:

You have been my friend; but if I were on the bench I would send you to jail. And yet I am sitting as a judge of a higher court than Massachusetts ever knew.

Yet the demand for blood has been made on us—court though we are, sworn judges though we be.

Mr. President, what is this wrong done the Senator from Utah, which has poured this shower of petitions upon this court and brought this flood of letters to nearly every member of it-not every member, because out of Indiana's nearly 3,000, 000 people but few have written me on this subject, although my correspondence with my constituents is enormous. I am prouder of that evidence of faith and trust in me of Indiana's people than I am of the place in this body which they have given me. I am proud that they know that not all the letters that could be written in a hundred years nor all the petitions that could be gathered by any propaganda, even as active a propaganda as the one that is seeking to destroy this man and intimidate this court, would swerve me if I knew the writers of those letters and the signers of those petitions to be misinformed.

THE COUNTRY MISINFORMED.

And, Mr. President, the country has been misinformed. The average man and woman has been told for three long years that Reed Smoot is a criminal guilty of a disgusting and filthy crime-a crime abhorrent to our race and destructive of our civilization. The country has been told that this man is a That is the charge on which he has been tried polygamist. before the bar of American public opinion; that the charge upon which he has been convicted by the millions; and that the charge that has injured him as deeply as Dreyfus was injured. For that charge is utterly false. The evidence shows, and it is finally admitted, that this accused Senator is not a polygamist—the word is too foul to utter except on compulsion—never was that base thing, and that his home life is ideal in purity.

Not only is this true, but the evidence shows that, from the first, Reed Smoot has been the leader of the younger, wiser, and more modern element of his church that oppose this insult to marriage.

Yet the American people believe this Senator a practicer of this horrible shame. How that impression has been circulated it is not necessary, as it would not be pleasant, to describe. But the belief that he is such a monster is general among the masses and held by most of the reading public.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS.

Here is evidence of this-these six great volumes, with thousands and thousands of clippings from thousands of papers all over the Republic, telling in editorial and news columns that the accused is such a criminal. But for the brevity of time, I would read at random some of these, so that no Senator could have any excuse for not understanding the source of all these petitions.

I shall not do that—time does not permit; but I will take enough time, at least, to have read a very recent one, which I send to the desk. It was handed to me two or three days ago by a fellow-Senator from a middle Northwestern State, and as you will see was written after the speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows]. I should like that Senator to hear it. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senator Burrows on Tuesday last delivered a remarkable speech in the United States Senate, denying the right of the Mormon Senator from Utah to a seat in that body. He charged that Senator Shoor is cohabiting with five so-called "wives" in open defiance of law and has forty-five children, three of whom were born the present year.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is no more absurd to us who know the facts than thousands and tens of thousands of clippings like it from all over the Republic, from Canada to Mexico and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. False statements like that have been going to the people for three years. Does that throw any light upon these petitions?

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] said that this word "polygamy" was not mentioned in one of these petitions. But we all know how such petitions are secured. They go to a good woman and say: "Will you sign this petition—it's against Smoot?" And she, believing what everybody believes, signs it. We have proof of this in the formal remonstrance, on which this whole "investigation" has taken place—taken place at the cost of tens of thousands of dollars of the people's money. The man who got it up was compelled to admit on the stand, under oath, that some of the signers of that remonstrance never read it or had it read to them; and this, although it is the formal complaint on which a man's honor has been tried and a State's representative in this body has been put in jeopardy of his place. So much for the words-the form-of these petitions.

Since last session I have personally spoken to not less than 300 men and women all over the country on this subject. Every one of them thought the Utah Senator a polygamist, and was therefore against him. And nearly all of them when told the truth frankly changed their attitude.

COMMENT OF AN AMERICAN WOMAN.

Only the other day a noble American woman, an officer of one of our splendid American schools for girls, spoke to me of the curse of the murder of children in mills and mines, and then mentioned the case of Senator Smoor. She was bitterly against him, because she believed him a polygamist; but when she learned the truth—when she learned that his life was stainless, and that in his pure and perfect home one woman reigned, its loved and cherished queen, this grand woman paled and said:

"Then a great wrong has been done to him and a greater wrong to her."

In my own city a man whose brilliant books have given him increasing fame throughout the English-speaking world, whose character is as exalted as his heart is fearless, and whose ideals are as high as his talents are distinguished wrote an article in an Indianapolis paper, calling this accused Senator "the much-married Smoot." That was three years ago, his information being the same that has misled the Nation.

But even now and here in Washington the same belief is common. Passing before the building of a great Washington newspaper I saw on the bulletin announcing notable events this statement about Senator Knox's remarkable speech:

Senator Knox opposes expulsion of Polygamist Smoot.

I asked the editor of that paper for that part of the bulletin; he gave it to me as a matter of justice, and here it is for every Senator to see [exhibiting]. The painter of the bulletin was not to blame; he only voiced the universal error.

That, then, is the issue on which Reed Smoot has been tried outside of this Chamber. That is the source of the public clamor with which this court has been stormed. That is the wrong that has been done this man, his wife, and his children. And that is the wrong that must be righted by this court and by the American people; for the ruin of human reputation is the saddest of all ruin, save that of the soul itself. Justice to one wronged man is more important than all our other labors.

EVIDENCE OF ACCUSED SENATOR'S BLAMELESS LIFE.

And the evidence gives no excuse for this. All witnesses testified to this Senator's blameless life—but this did not go out to the country. On the contrary, every discreditable thing that others had done for the past fifty years was sent broadcast and this man's name subtly connected with it. Although the committee, as a judicial body, was trying the honor of a man, no rules of evidence were observed, and rumor, hearsay, speculation, were unleashed and ran as blind and raging as mad dogs. Had the rules of evidence been observed the investigation would not have lasted a fortnight and the testimony would not have filled a pamphlet.

Doctor Buckley, the distinguished religious editor and eminent Methodist divine, testified that his diligent and painstaking personal inquiry among Gentiles and Mormons, Democrats and Republicans alike, in Utah brought forth nothing but praise cf Senator Smoot. Doctor Buckley on oath said:

Every person I saw—and the number was as many as I could see at the principal hotel, at a church to which I went, where there were more than a thousand people, with scores of whom I spoke afterwards—wherever I asked the question, "What kind of a man is Mr. Smoot?" whether he was a polygamist or anybody believed he was a polygamist, I am compelled to say that I did not find, either in California, where I had been for months at a convention, or while in Utah, a single person who said one word against Mr. Smoot. Nor did I find one person who believed that he had ever been married to anyone but his wife, or had otherwise lived with any woman who was not his wife. That is the fact in the case. Republicans and Democrats, Mormons and Gentiles, all talked in that way.

Yet the country did not hear this; its ears were stunned and eyes seared by that one baleful word "polygamy."

TESTIMONY OF MARY COULTER, "GENTILE," PRESIDENT OF UTAH'S STATE FEDERATION OF WOMAN'S CLUBS.

The most impressive of the army of witnesses who, during the three years' investigation, were, at enormous expense to the American people—and over $26,000 of the people's money has been spent on this attempt to ruin this man-marched to Washington was without doubt Mrs. Mary G. Coulter, of Ogden, Utah. Her dignity of bearing, her manifest and remarkable ability, her distinguished culture, instantly commanded respect, confidence, and esteem. Mrs. Coulter had been an Illinois girl; was an alumnus of the Northwestern College and of the University of Michigan. She went to Utah as the wife of Doctor Coulter, a non-Mormon.

Mrs. Coulter is a Gentile. She is president of Utah's State Federation of Woman's Clubs—for in every town and city in Utah as elsewhere women have their literary clubs; she was president of the Weber County Woman's Republican Club-for in Utah more than elsewhere women take part in politics; and she was a member of the legislature of Utah, and chairman of the judiciary committee of the house—for in Utah, unlike most of the remainder of the Republic, women vote, hold office, and participate in all civil government, municipal and State.

Mrs. Coulter, a Gentile member of Utah's legislature, a woman member of Utah's legislature, voted to make this accused man one of Utah's representatives in the National Senate. She testified that as president of the State Federation of Wo-man's Clubs she had traveled all over the State and knew conditions thoroughly; of the universal esteem of the people, Gentile and Mormon alike, for this accused man; of her own personal investigation of his life and character, and of the purity of both.

Yet the clear voice of this splendid and typical American woman was not heard amid the loathsome stories that filled the whole Republic.

THE ACCUSED SENATOR HAS BEEN LEADER AGAINST POLYGAMY FOR FOUR-TEEN YEARS.

Scores of witnesses testified, like Doctor Buckley, the great Methodist editor, and Mrs. Coulter, the accomplished American woman. Yet all the while the country heard only the foul word "polygamy." Men testified that Senator Smoot was active against that infamy, not recently only, but for years. In 1892 Judge Judd, of Tennessee, a Gentile appointed by President Cleveland as Territorial judge of Utah, before the Committee on Territories of the Senate, testified that the younger Mormons were active against polygamy, and that their leader was Reed

This, Mr. President, was fourteen years ago. Certainly Mr. Smoot fourteen years ago had not corrupted a United States judge into telling before a Senate committee a falsehood. After describing at length-my time does not permit me to quote-the movement of the younger Mormons to end this curse, he said:

Others said to me-Listen, Senators-notably REED SMOOT, son of the president of a stake and the Republican candidate for mayor and himself a product of polygamous marriage: "Judge, we can not stand this thing, and we will not stand this thing. It has got to be settled."

From Judge Judd, magistrate of the United States court for Utah, testifying in 1892, to Mary Coulter, member of Utah's legislature and president of Utah's State Federation of Woman's Clubs, testifying in 1806—and both "Gentiles," both non-Mormons—the evidence is unbroken.

WHAT THE ACCUSED'S NEIGHBORS, WHO ARE "GENTILES," SAY ABOUT HIM.

Now, when Mr. Smoot was a candidate for the Senate this matter was suggested in his own State, and it was said, by those who have pursued him here, that he was the tool of the church. I think that the man's own neighbors, who do not belong to the Senator's church, are the best witnesses of that. So without the knowledge of Senator Smoot, who was then a candidate for the office he now fills, the "Gentiles" of Provo, the city where he lived, got up and signed the following petition, and it was signed by every Gentile in Provo except four. I want to read it:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States and residents of Provo City, Utah, the home of Hon. Reed Smoot, respectfully submit the following:

We are not members of the Mormon Church, but in fairness to Mr. Smoot we state:

First. The reports circulated in the press of some parts of the United States.

SMOOT we state:

First. The reports circulated in the press of some parts of the United States to the effect that he is a polygamist are ridiculous in the extreme to us, and must be to the minds of all fair-minded people who know bim, and said reports are plainly intended by those prompting them, willfully or in ignorance of his life, to misrepresent the gentle-them, willfully or in ignorance of his life, to misrepresent the gentleman.

Second. Reports are also current that Mr. Smoot, who is a candidate for United States Senator, is the creature and candidate of the Mormon Church for the position and that he will be the Senator of said church if elected. We do not believe such statements can be honestly made by men acquainted with Mr. Smoot, but we do believe they were made by people determined to prejudice his candidacy, regardless of the methods to be employed. We know the gentleman to be fearless, honest, independent, and of sterling worth, and not the mean character out of which tools, such as his calumniators say he would be, are formed. We believe Mr. Smoot to be a man of that high integrity that he would decline any political office if he could not accept it with that freedom, independence, and manhood that should be borne by every true American citizen in political place. We are confident that Mr. Smoot would immediately refuse to accept any office if the duties of his church required him to surrender his independence in the exercise of his functions in the slightest degree.

Third. Our opinions and belief with respect to Mr. Smoot stated above have been formed by an intimate acquaintance and coming in contact with him almost daily through an extended period of the past. He is progressive and active. His business life bears strong marks of power to execute his undertakings. He is known as chaste and pure in all his relations, both private and public, is the husband of one wife, and his home is one of the ideal homes of the Republic.

Fourth. He represents "young Utah," with all of its commendable progress, and was one of the erilest advocates of the division of the citizens of this State on national party lines.

That is signed by every non-Mormon resident of his home, ex-The first who signs is one of the most eminent cept four men. lawyers in Utah. And now listen—the second signature on this petition is that of a Christian minister, James Stoddard, of Provo City, rector of Emanuel Episcopal Church.

OPINION OF ANOTHER EPISCOPAL MINISTER

Yesterday Senator Smoot received, and was kind enough this morning when I came in the Senate to hand me, the following letter which I think it is worth while reading

CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y., February 18, 1907.

Hon. REED SMOOT. Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator. About an hour ago I was waited upon by a committee that urged me to send a telegram to the "reform bureau" at Washington, asking for your expulsion from the Senate. This I declined to do for the reason I consider you an honorable, upright, loyal citizen and entitled to your seat in that honorable body.

I have lived in your city, have been in your home, and know your family, and I am frank to say that you impressed me favorably and one worthy of the confidence of the people of Utah. May I remind you that you were one that helped me in my work?

He was an Episcopal minister, remember. And he goes on-

You have my sympathy and good will, and I hope you may be permitted to keep your seat.

With kind regards for yourself and all the members of your household, believe me, I remain,

Most cordially,

Rev. L. B. JOHNSTON,

Rev. L. B. Johnston, Rector St. John's Church. P. S .- If a telegram in your behalf will help from me, wire.

Yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding all of this, even now and here, this man is held up as a supporter of the crime which all his friends say he has been fighting for sixteen years. other day, in his brilliant, his exhaustive, his able speech, which had required and no doubt received months of preparation, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] read what purported to be an extract from an address of Senator Smoot delivered in Salt Lake City in 1905, since he has been a member of the Senate. This was done—and I will read the extract in a moment—to show that he is still an upholder of crime and sanctions all the practices of his church in the past.

INCORRECT QUOTATION FROM ACCUSED'S SPEECH.

Before I go into this I wish to say that I acquit the Senator from Michigan for what I am about to refer to. He is incapa-ble of doing any human being an injustice knowingly. He has labored through his mighty task, he has performed his enormous duties with industry, fidelity, courage, and uniform cour-tesy to his associates. Of course, I know perfectly well that this clipping was prepared for him, as our material is sometimes prepared for all of us, by those who would help us or who are interested in the cause.

So before I say a word about the clipping I entirely exonerate the Senator from Michigan from any blame, if any blame there be, and that is for the Senate to judge. I do not think that I would refer to it even now if it had not had such an effect as to make the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] deliver most of his speech upon it.

This is quoted from a report in the This is the quotation. Deseret Evening News, of Salt Lake, of the remarks of Senator Smoot at Salt Lake City, in 1905, before a great Mormon congregation:

I believe that the Latter-Day Saints, who have the spirit of God in them, never had more confidence in a man or a set of men than they have in the presidency of the church to-day.

I am, indeed, thankful for my standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormon). When' I study the history of the church I find that it is at all times the same. I am not ashamed of the power and position of the Mormon Church. I say to Joseph F. Smith to-day, this people will never turn against thee on the testimony of a traitor.

Very well!

Now, Mr. President, that appears as one solid quotation. Here is the address itself in the Deseret Evening News from which identical paper the Senator from Michigan said it was As a matter of fact the sentences, five of them, of this quotation are taken from segregated portions of the address from six hundred to fifteen hundred words apart. The first one is from there [indicating]; the second one is from there [indicating]; the third one is from here [indicating]
Mr. FORAKER. How far apart?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am trying to show. Each sentence is separated from any other by from six hundred to fifteen hundred words. The first one is there [indicating]; the second one is there [indicating]; the third one is here [indicating], three columns away; the fourth one here [indicating], five columns away, and the fifth there [indicating], at the end of the third column on that page. They were disconnected and taken utterly out of their context and rearranged.

But, Mr. President, this was not the worst. Two of them were actually changed. The sentence as read by the Senator from Michigan is as follows:

When I study the history of the church I find that it is at all times

Appears, in reality, as printed in the paper from which the Senator said it was taken, as follows:

When I study the history of the people I find that it is about the same as it has always been, with but a few exceptions.

Where the Senator quotes Mr. Smoot in another place as saying that he is not ashamed of the power and position of the Mormon Church, the true quotation is:

I am not ashamed of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation.

Doesn't that sound familiar? It should, for that sentence is a quotation from Paul.

Even that is not the worst. The whole address is not about polygamy or any other violation of the law. The entire address concerns the distribution of church funds, which the authorities had been charged with spending corruptly. Men in the church and out of it had sought to create a schism in the church, to split it asunder, and they had done so by charging that the church funds were being corruptly used, so as to destroy the people's confidence in the church officers.

That is the subject of the whole address, and the purpose of Senator Smoot in addressing the congregation there was merely to restore the confidence of the great congregation in the chief authorities of the church. Yet notwithstanding all of this, it was actually used on this floor to blacken this man, and so effectively used that the Senator from Arkansas based most of his speech upon it. It is only fair to the Senator from Arkan-sas to say that he quoted the extract entire, exactly as given in the speech of the Senator from Michigan. The Senator from Arkansas did not know, any more than the Senator from Mich-The Senator from igan knew, that it had been extracted from widely separated portions of Senator Smoor's speech, rearranged, and sentences actually changed.

But here, Mr. President, is the closing sentence of Senator Smoot's address-and this sentence was not read:

We will continue to be good citizens of this Nation. We will uphold and pray for it. We will be true men and true women to our church, to our country, and to our God.

Why was not that sentence read?

THE CHARGE OF TREASON,

What now of the charge of treason which is made before this court? It is said that the Senator which Utah has sent here as her representative-sent by the members of Utah's legislature, who were both Gentiles and Mormons, both women and menshould be expelled because he has taken an oath inconsistent with his oath as Senator; because he owes a higher allegiance to his church than to his country.

This charge on which he is being tried before this court is second only in its gravity to the charge of polygamy upon which he has been tried before the people. If either charge were true he ought to be expelled. We have seen that the charge upon which he has been tried before the people is worse than false. Now I shall show that the charge upon which he is being tried before this court is also worse than false.

All Mormons take the same religious obligations-the same oath, if oath there be. Six witnesses who had taken the oath swore that it contained the obligation of vengeance upon the Nation, though none of them agreed as to the exact language. Of these six witnesses all but one were impeached, and that one did not use the word Nation at all.

In addition to impeachment, three were shown to be drunk-ards; one insane, having the hallucination that he had personal relations with the devil, and one admitted on the stand that she had perjured herself. The testimony of these witnesses would not be received in any court of justice; and if received, any judge would direct any jury to disregard their evidence.

Against this, witness after witness of perfect reputation, who had taken the endowment ceremonies, testified that no such oath was administered; and no attempt was made to impair or impeach their testimony. Finally, Senator Smoot himself, under oath, testified that he had never taken or heard of such an oath, but that on the contrary he and his people were taught love of country and devotion to the Republic.

THESE "TRAITORS" DIED ON THE BATTLEFIELD FOR THE FLAG.

But this is not all. I was in the Philippines during the in-I was with General Lawton in the Morong camsurrection. paign. I took part in the advance on Taytay. The day before that advance I met many officers and men. Among them was a major of artillery named Richard W. Young, in command of the Utah battery. After General Lawton had introduced me, I asked him as we walked away, "Is that man from Utah, and if so, is he a Mormon?" General Lawton answered, "He is from Utah and is a Mormon and the best volunteer artillery officer in the Philippines."

In surprise I asked General Lawton, "And these Utah bat-teries—are any of these men Mormons?" And General Lawton answered, "Yes; a great many of them; and they are splendid soldiers.'

Then I asked whether any Mormons had been killed or wounded in action, and General Lawton said: "Men of these batteries have been both killed and wounded; but of course I do not know whether those killed and wounded were Mormons or not. But all of them are brave men and splendid soldiers."

But many of the Mormon members of these volunteer Utah batteries were killed and wounded. I will now read to the Senate the official statement of the War Department giving the service of these Utah batteries, showing the men killed or dying from wounds, among them many Mormons-no Mormons died of disease—and telling the service they performed and the engagements in which they participated in the war with Spain:

WAR DEPARTMENT, THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Washington, February 18, 1907.

Hon. Albert J. Beveridge, United States Senator, The Portland, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Albert J. Beveridge,

United States Senator, The Portland, Washington, D. C.

Sir: Referring to your telephonic request of to-day for a statement showing the military record of Harry A. Young and Richard W. Young, Itah Artillery, the names of those who were killed, who died of disease, and who were wounded as of that organization, and the engagements in which the batteries participated in the Morong Peninsula, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

It is shown by the official records that Harry A. Young was encoded May 5, 1898, at Fort Douglas, Utah; that he was mustered into service May 9, 1898, as quartermaster-sergeant with Battery A, Battalion, Utah Artillery Volunteers, and that he was killed in action February 6, 1899, near Manila. Philippine Islands. His service is recorded as honest and faithful, and he was specially mentioned by the commanding officer of the battery for meritorious service in action on the night of July 31, 1898, as one of the seven members of the battery who were selected from a large number of volunteers, and who went forward as a relief party from Camp Dewey, Philippine Islands, to the trenches through the heaviest part of the firing.

This soldier was detailed October 1, 1898, on special duty with the board of health at Manila, Philippine Islands, and on January 16, 1899, Maj. Gen. E. S. Otis, commanding the Eighth Army Corps, cabled from Manila, Philippine Islands, to the War Department a request that the governor of Utah be authorized to appoint Quartermaster-Sergeant Young an assistant surgeon. The governor of Utah was informed on the same day of the request and of his authority to make the appointment, and he informed the Department January 19, 1899, that the appointment had been made. On January 20, 1899, telegraphic instructions were issued from this Department directing the soldier to report to about of colleons, at such place as the president of the board might of calleons, at such place as the president of the board might of assistant surgeon. No record has been found of his examination under those instructions, his death having doubtless precluded further active of assistant surgeon. No record has been found of his examination under those instructions, his death having doubtless precluded further active of the surgeon of the

About half of the members of these batteries were "Gentiles," and about half were "Mormons." And the killed and wounded were about equally divided. Harry Young, the officer killed in action, of whose gallantry the War Department speaks, was a Mormon. The Filipino bullets found no "treason" in these Utah hearts. How better can men prove their loyalty than by their lives?

Yet every one of these men had gone through the same church ceremonies that Senator Smoot has gone through. It was an inspiring circumstance. It filled me with emotion and uplifted me with a pride to find that here, thousands of miles from home, Americans of every religious creed and every political party-Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Mormon, atheist and Christian, Democrat and Republican-were giving their blood and their lives for the honor of the flag. It was glorious to know that when the flag of our country is fired upon, no matter where or by whom, men of all churches and of all parties leave home and loved ones and journey around the world, if need be, to suffer and die in its defense.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE A UNITED PEOPLE.

I witnessed only one other incident in the Philippines that showed how thoroughly this Republic is one and how profoundly loyal all its citizens are, and that was in the swamps The Tennessee regiment there had as its officers Col. Gracey Childers, son of a Confederate soldier, Lieutenant-Colonel Bayliss, son of a Confederate soldier, and Major Cheatham, son of General Cheatham, of the Confederate army. These sons of men who had fought as men have seldom fought for a principle of Government had accepted as completely as their fathers the settlement of that great issue and were as proud of their uniforms and as devoted to the Nation as were the men whom Washington led through sacrifice to victory.

No, Mr. President, it is not true that any section of this country is disloyal. It is not true that hundreds of thousands of American citizens are banded together to destroy the Repub-lic. The men I saw on the firing line prove that it is false. The men killed in battle beneath the colors prove that it is The graves of American soldiers all over the Republicin Utah as well as in Michigan—prove that it is false. We are one people, thank God, equally devoted to free institutions, of which none is more precious than that of religious liberty.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

Religious liberty! Religious intolerance has stained crimson more of this earth than any other cause. Religious tolerance is one of the corner stones of this Republic. Attempts have been made to shatter it, but it remains firm and unimpaired. Older Senators remember the Know Nothing movement of the fifties; all of us remember the A. P. A. movement of a few years ago, when charges were made against a splendid church, in exact words a reproduction of one of the charges about the political domination and purpose of this Senator's church which are now made here.

I have on my desk the books that recite formal complaints upon which it was sought to inflame the people, and you could lay them side by side with this particular charge made here now and not tell the difference. I have here the history of my own church, the Methodist Church, which recites the charges made against the Methodists in England, when, because of such charges, John and Charles Wesley were stoned, and but for God's providence would have been killed. I have here the story of the persecutions of the Quakers, and also the terrible, but true tale of the burning of the witches in New England.

PRINCIPLES THAT MAKE THE FLAG SACRED.

But against all of these the spirit of liberty at last prevailed. And this in the final analysis is the ultimate issue before us. For polygamy I have a hatred made stronger by disgust. For enemies of our Government I have a hatred intensified by the period and circumstances of my birth. But we have seen that this accused man is not a practicer of this revolting crime, but its enemy. We have seen that he is not a traitor, but a loyal man. And so the only question that remains is that of the tolerance of his religion. And though his religion is to me incomprehensible, grotesque, and absurd, I hate intolerance of it and all religions as much as I hate treason, with which he is falsely charged before this court, or the other unspeakable shame with which he is falsely charged before the people.

Obedience to law, tolerance of opinion, loyalty to country—these are the principles which make the flag a sacred thing and this Republic immortal. These are the principles that make all Americans brothers and constitute this Nation God's highest method of human enlightenment and living liberty. By these principles let us live and vote and die, so that "this Government of the people, for the people, and by the people may not perish from the earth." [Applause in the galleries.]

Before the conclusion of Mr. Beveridge's speech,

Mr. BURROWS rose

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BEVERIDGE, I do.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course I have no objection to the Senator speaking at any length, but it is understood by the Senafrom Illinois and myself that the time shall be equally

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will close in a very few moments.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I have been necessarily absent from the Senate, as Senators are aware, and for that reason I do not know anything about the arrangement that is now referred to. The duties that I have been attending to have been postponed for the day, among other reasons that I might come here and, if there was opportunity, participate to some extent at least in this debate. I should be glad if the Senator would advise me what he has in mind. I have not a great deal to say, but I want to say something, if it is convenient.

Mr. BURROWS. The suggestion was made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], as we had four hours and a half, that that time should be divided. That was objected to by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money]. Subsequently, in a personal conversation with him, he withdrew his objection, and the agreement will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would have been through by this time, because I am shortening this address, and I am shortening it a great deal on account of my desire to give the Senator from Michigan all the time possible at the close.

After the conclusion of Mr. Beveringe's speech,

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I shall offer as a substitute for the pending resolution the following:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT, a Senator from Utah, be expelled from the Senate of the United States.

I can not vote for the resolution in its present form. For the substitute which I have offered, or if that shall fail, for the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, I can vote in all good conscience.

I say that, Mr. President, without intending in any way to impeach the personal life and character of the Senator from Utah, which so far as I know have been clean and right, and without attempting to impeach his conduct and character as a member of this body, which I believe to have been upright and honorable, I shall vote for his expulsion because I believe that as an apostle of the Mormon Church he owes duties and obligations which are inconsistent with his duties and obligations as a Sen

But, Mr. President, while my inclinations have all along been to vote for the resolution in its present form, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] in his clear and perfect argument has demonstrated conclusively to my mind that the purpose of this resolution is simply to accomplish the fact of expulsion, while attempting to evade the constitutional requirement of a two-thirds majority.

The Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members. There is no question that the Senator from Utah was elected in the manner prescribed by the Constitution; there is no question that the constitution is the provided by the Constitution. tion as to the validity of the returns of the election; and he has all the qualifications required in the Constitution.

If there are other qualifications for a United States Senator, unknown to the Constitution and the law, they are unknown to If there be such qualifications, what are they? Are they undefined? Is it possible that the makers of the Constitution intended that there should be no way by which a State could know in advance of the election what were the necessary qualifications for a Senator? Is it possible that it was intended that there should be no standard of eligibility except the varying moods and passions of the Senate, which might prescribe one qualification at one time and another qualification at another, and different qualifications for different States and different

In the same section of the Constitution it is provided that each House, with the concurrence of two-thirds, may expel a member. That power is absolute and may be exercised for any cause. The power is guarded by the provision that it shall require a two-thirds vote. Why were the makers of the Constitution so careful to provide that no member should be expelled from this body except by a two-thirds vote, if they had provided already, in the very same section of the Constitution, that by a mere change in the verbiage of the resolution, the very same result could be accomplished by a mere majority of the Senate for any cause whatever?

Mr. President, if the power contended for by the supporters of this resolution exists, if a bare majority of the Senate for any cause whatever may cast a man out of this body who has all the constitutional qualifications, who was fairly and honestly elected, then the provision that it shall require two-thirds to expel a member is not worth the paper upon which it was written.

Why were the framers of the Constitution so careful to provide that no State should be deprived of its equal representation in the Senate and to fix that right so firmly in the Constitution that it could not be taken away by amendment, that it could not be taken away by two-thirds of both Houses and three-fourths of the States, if a bare majority of this body may at any time and for any cause deny a State its representation in

Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the gallant and heroic fight which my friend from Idaho [Mr. Durois] has been making against the corrupt and wicked power of the Mormon Church; but I can not agree with my friend when he speaks of these objections as technical. Mr. President, they go to the very substance of the Constitution and to the very substance of the rights of the States. I am not willing to vote for any precedent which will allow a bare majority of the Senate to cast out the representative of a sovereign State, and I believe that no Senator, especially no Senator from the South, ought to be willing to establish that precedent.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he knows of such a precedent in the election cases in the Senate, where a member was expelled by less than a two-thirds majority.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think it was ever attempted.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are three cases, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee. One is the Gallatin case, where a Senator was excluded because he was not nine years a citizen of the United States. Another was excluded where he was lacking in one of the other qualifications required by the Constitution, and therefore not elected; and one other Senator was excluded because he was elected by only a plurality. They were excluded by a majority vote. But in all other cases, so far as I can find, where the right to sit here was in question and has been determined in the Senate, there was not a case but that required a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, there was a Senator from my own State expelled from the Senate because he was charged with being in sympathy with the rebellion; but even for such a cause as that, and in such a time of passion as that, it was admitted that it would take a two-thirds vote to expel him, and it has never been attempted to be done in any other way.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I shall east my vote in favor of the resolution now pending. Were I to do otherwise I should feel that I had condoned every offense ever committed against good morals and the written laws of the country by the Mormon Church. Not the least among the long list of these offenses was the sending to this high legislative tribunal of one of the active apostles of the Mormon organi-

These words, Mr. President, are not uttered in hostility to or out of any lack of respect for REED SMOOT. They are spoken to give expression to the views I hold in regard to Mormonism, based upon the public record it has made for itself. In sending its apostle here the Mormon managers, always aggressive in advancing the political interests of their leaders, furnished us with another sample of brazen effrontery in further defying the public sentiment of the country relative to the obnoxious institution for which they are responsible. Having intrenched itself in political power in many States and Territories, Mormonism comes here seeking a clean bill of health in the form of an indorsement of all its flagrant misdeeds. The defeat of this resolution would be tantamount to putting the seal of official approval upon a conspiracy conceived, as I believe, in treasonable antagonism to our republican institutions.

Mr. President, there is not a city or village or hamlet in any section of the Union, where Mormonism is not in control of local affairs, that does not welcome to its circle of institutions of moral advancement the coming of a new church society or organization representative of any or all of the existing creeds of religious faith, save that of the Mormon Church. A proposal to establish a society of this creed in my own State, where Mormonism has not yet reared its head, would evoke a storm of protest. So it would, I confidently believe, in any other section of the country where the institution is not in political control.

The Senator from Indiana asked that he be not interrupted. It had been my intention to ask that Senator if he would be willing to welcome to Indianapolis, the Senator's home, the establishment there of a Mormon tabernacle, with all its accessories and trimmings, including the twelve apostles and the president and councilors of the Mormon Church. I am sure he would gladly welcome the coming of a Presbyterian college, a Catholic university, or any other institution of moral advancement, but I doubt very much if he would as gladly welcome the removal of the Mormon machinery from Salt Lake City to the proud and virtuous capital of his own State.

It is a striking fact that no one, save Senator Smoot himself, has arisen here to defend Mormonism, but only to excuse it. One Senator has said, in effect, that the Mormonism of to-day is not what it was a few years ago. The arguments on the other side have been devoted wholly to a defense of Senator Smoot, who, as we personally know him here, needs no defense. The Clifton Springs letter, read by the Senator from Indiana, speaks highly of Senator Smoot, who had on one occasion shown the writer a favor, but not a word for Mormonism.

It will be time enough, Mr. President, for this law-giving body to embrace in its membership the apostolic representatives of Mormonism when that organization, duly renovated and reformed, no longer a menace to civilization, is worthy of admission in full fellowship with other organizations, against whose history, tenets, and practices the moral sentiment of the land is not in revolt.

After the most serious consideration of the question upon which I am in duty bound to cast a vote, I have been unable to reach any other conclusion than that in this very peculiar and exceptional case my action must be controlled by a law more profoundly fundamental than the literal texts which have furnished the eloquent arguments of Senators with whom I am obliged to disagree.

I have been surprised that Senators who have spoken against this resolution have done so as if this were an ordinary case in court; as if they were defending a criminal at the bar. The opponents of Senator Smoor do not charge him with being a criminal. They put the case upon a higher plane than that, They charge that he is here as the special representative of an institution that has not hesitated to commit a crime whenever its spiritual or its temporal interests demanded it. There is a great moral principle involved here. What are termed the "legal aspects" of the case are of secondary importance. The Mormon Church is on trial for high crimes and misdemeanors before a court whose jurisdiction in an extraordinary case like this extends beyond the mere application of written law.

In dealing with the dangerous doctrine of an institution established upon the principle that it is superior to the governmental system under which we live we can afford to rise above conventional constitutional construction. The higher law should be invoked, the unwritten law embraced in the inherent duty of every citizen of the Republic to defend the written instrument from the assaults of those who would destroy it.

With the history of the Mormon Church before us it is discreditable to the universally accepted creeds of religious faith to say that Mormonism found its inspiration in religious convictions; that its sponsors were moved wholly by a desire to serve God, and thus to contribute to the salvation of mankind. It is impossible for me to associate Mormonism with other sectarian organizations. It has no place in such a classification. I am in full accord with the constitutional provision that everyone should worship God in his or her own way, but I have no sympathy with an organization whose oath-bound members array themselves in "the livery of heaven" in order that they may gain control of temporal affairs, social, political, and commercial. In this respect the Mormon Church is notoriously unique. Its scheme of salvation is based wholly upon its success in dominating the political fortunes of the community in which it Without this advantage it would be a conducts its operations. Once in political control it moves rapidly forward until it acquires complete business and social supremacy. all times the saving of souls is but an incidental part of its strange enterprise. And yet at no time and in no way, not even through its perfected system of colonization, has it been enabled to hide itself from the penetrating public gaze. The law-abiding people of the land have not been deceived. From Nauto the endowment house at Salt Lake City, from the place of plural marriages there to the tithe-paying colony, from the colony to the ballot box, and the ballot box to the United States Senate an indulgent public has looked steadily on in prayerful hopefulness that the time would surely come when the strange and devious course of Mormonism, ever defiant of popular opinion, stimulated with the lust of possession and power, would receive a check. That time has come, and no more fitting place could be chosen than in this Chamber of impartial judgment for the rendering of the long-delayed verdict.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know, Mr. President, what arrangement has been made as to the division of time. Therefore I do not know whether I am to be limited or not; but I infer from what has been said that all who speak hereafter will be expected to speak very briefly.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Senator will allow me—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FORAKER. I do. Mr. BURROWS. It has been agreed between the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] and myself that the time shall be divided equally, each side to have two hours and fifteen minutes. There has been consumed on the side of those who are opposed to the resolution one hour and ten minutes, leaving an hour and five minutes remaining.

Mr. FORAKER. An hour and five minutes remaining.

Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how many others are to speak, but I will be just as brief as I can be. I shall be brief, Mr. President, because it suits me to be brief. I have been so exceedingly busy with other matters that I have not had an opportunity to make any preparation whatever for the dis-cussion of this resolution. It suits me to be brief in another respect. I am aware that other Senators have elaborately discussed this whole case, and that at this time it is not necessary that I should take it up for discussion in that elaborate way in which I would feel it my duty to discuss it if it had not been for the previous discussion. All I want to say I can say, therefore, in a few minutes.

I want to say something chiefly because this whole case as it has been presented on the other side, as I have understood the spirit of the speeches that have been made and the speeches themselves, was well illustrated by the remark made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hansbrough], who has just taken his seat, when he said that in this case the Mormon Church was on trial. I know, Mr. President, that by a good many, both in the Senate and outside of the Senate, that idea seems to have prevailed, but it has not with me. I have understood from the beginning that not the Mormon Church, not Joseph F. Smith, not anybody but only Reed Smoot, was on trial, and that we had in the trial of REED SMOOT to bear in mind not what the Senator from North Dakota said he thought it our duty to be governed by, namely, a higher law, but the Constitution of the United States.

We sit here, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] very eloquently said a while ago, as a higher court, every man charged with an official duty which he must perform. is at all times governed by his oath of office, which requires him to support and uphold the Constitution of the United States. There is nothing in his oath of office about a higher law

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, from my standpoint, there is a great moral obligation involved in this case—much greater than the mere question of the seat of REED SMOOT in this body.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator stated that when he was making his speech a few minutes ago. There is a great moral question involved, and I would think I was violating all the morals of this case if I were to vote in this matter contrary to the requirements of my oath of office.

This higher law we all appreciate. The Senator from North Dakota is not the only man who thinks of the higher law; we all think of it; but the trouble about following the higher law is that every man writes the higher law to suit himself. What we are here to follow and to be governed [Laughter.] by and to observe-and we violate our oaths of office if we do not do it-is the Constitution of the United States in its requirements.

Now, coming to this case, I do not know that I fully understood the amendment offered a moment ago by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack] to the resolution of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SPOONER. It provided for expulsion.
Mr. FORAKER. Yes; as I understand, he proposes so to amend the resolution of the Senator from Michigan that we shall vote to expel instead of simply that the seat shall be vacated. I shall vote for that amendment, and then I shall vote against expulsion. I shall vote against expulsion, because, Mr. President, according to my knowledge of this case and the opinion I have of the testimony and of the rules governing us, no case whatever has been made that will justify us either in declaring vacant the seat or expelling the Senator from Utah.

The Senator from California just called my attention to the fact that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] has offered an amendment. I was not aware of that. I have been absent from the Senate on other duty. I will vote for the one or the other. [Laughter.] I will vote for the one that provides that our vote shall be a vote of expulsion. Then I will vote against

Mr. President, on what ground are we to expel Reed Smoot? He does not lack any of the constitutional qualifications. He is 30 years of age, and more. He has lived in this country more than nine years and in the State of Utah more than a year. He possesses, in other words, all the constitutional qualifications to be a Senator of the United States. He was regularly and duly elected by the legislature of Utah, and there has not been a criticism as to the character of that legislature. has been no charge of bribery or corruption or graft or anything else to discredit him or to discredit the transaction resulting in his election. He was not only elected by a majority of that legislature voting for him, but that majority was composed of Mormons and non-Mormons alike. The line of church division was not drawn. There was nothing whatever, therefore, in the manner of his election that is criticised here.

Neither, Mr. President, as the Senator from Indiana has forcibly pointed out, is there anything in his private character for which he is to be here criticised. The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that Reed Smoot, by the sworn testimony given in this case, has proven a better character than any other Senator here has a right to claim. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not allowed under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. He is so good a man that I sometimes almost doubt him. He seems to have no vices whatever. He does not drink or chew or smoke or swear, and he is not a polygamist; but, on the contrary, Mr. President, from early youth, as the testimony read by the Senator from Indiana a few moments ago shows, he was distinguished in the Mormon Church for his opposition to plural marriages. In early youth, although the son of a plural wife, he raised his voice against the continuance of polygamous marriages in the Mormon Church, and from that day until this has stood the opponent of that idea. It is not on that ground, then, that we can expel him, and, of course, we can not expel him for a mere belief.

Mr. President, limited as I am, I must pass over much I would be glad to say if I had time enough to dwell upon this case; but there are two propositions on which the opposition to him is specially urged. One is that he has taken an endowment oath, the obligations of which involve disloyalty to the United States Government. I took the pains to pay particular attention to the testimony on that point when it was given. have taken pains to analyze it since. That charge was made by some of the protestants, but it was abandoned by them before the case had very far proceeded. Later in the progress of the case, when every other ground seemed to have failed on which there could be a conclusion reached adverse to Reed Smoot, that charge was revived.

Only seven witnesses all told have testified against him on that point. I want to point out to Senators who those witnesses are. The first one testified that an oath—and he undertook to describe what it was, improper in its character-had be taken to pass through the endowment house. witness was shown by indisputable and uncontradicted testimony to be a man of bad reputation for truth and veracity and to be under the hallucination referred to by the Senator from Indiana. He was shown to be unreliable, as is shown by the testimony; in other words, witnesses did not hesitate to say that they regarded him as a crazy man whose statements could not be followed.

He was followed by two other witnesses who were also, by testimony that was uncontradicted, shown to be utterly unreliable. Then we had another witness, a Mrs. Elliott, who committed perjury on the stand, and admitted, on her cross-examination, that she had committed perjury in the testimony that she gave before the committee.

Then they called some other witnesses, all of whom, except one, contradicted the very proposition they were called to support—that is, by their testimony they showed that no such obligation as that relied upon to be established had ever been taken or had ever been administered. The last witness on that subject was a Professor Wolf. He testified at length, and it developed on his cross-examination that he had been connected with the church and with one of its educational institutions; that he had become addicted to drinking; that he had lost his place; had been dismissed from the service; had left the church, and had turned against it, and that he was of such character that his testimony was not reliable.

So that, not disregarding any higher law, but following strictly and conscientiously the requirements of our oath of office, seeking to do justice to this man and to this Government, upon the testimony offered we reached the conclusion that there was no evidence to warrant our finding that any such oath had ever been administered. We did not do that alone because the testimony in support of that claim was unsatisfactory, but also because of the testimony of witnesses, unimpeached and unimpeachable—among others, the testimony of REED SMOOT himself—that no such oath ever was administered.

The only other ground is that in the State of Utah polygamous cohabitation continues, and the relation of Reed Smoot to his church, in his apostolic position, makes him responsible

Mr. President, if we are to try the Mormon Church, as the Senator from North Dakota said, there is a great deal of testimony here that is hard on the Mormon Church. There is a great deal of testimony here that is very hard on different members of the Mormon Church; but when we take the testimony and come to see what it is and to analyze it and determine what force and effect it should have as to the question of polygamous cohabitation, we come to a most peculiar condition of things.

The testimony shows that in 1890 a manifesto was issued by the church by which all plural marriages were thereafter prohibited. The testimony further shows that since 1890 there have probably not been as many plural marriages among the Mormons since then as there have been bigamous marriages among the same number of protestants—not as many in all probability, for the number is exceedingly few. In 1890 there were about 2,400 polygamous familes living in Utah. Now there are less than 500. The law prohibits polygamous cohabitation, but it is a very singular state of law we have in that respect.

The law prohibiting polygamous marriages legitimatizes the children of those marriages. So it was that under the law the father who had plural wives and children by those plural wives had his children legitimatized, and under the law they having been legitimatized, it was not only his privilege but his duty to live with them and to care for them; but if he was to live with his children and to care for them, what was he to do and what was to be his relation as to his wife, the most innocent of all concerned? It made a particularly hard case, and it was a hard case to deal with not only in Utah, but throughout the world wherever Christian people have been called upon to deal with polygamous cohabitation and polygamous marriages.

What did they do in Utah? They undertook to prosecute. But with what result? I will read just an extract or two from the testimony

Judge William McCarthy, of the supreme court of Utah, a non-Mormon and an uncompromising opponent of polygamy, who has held many important offices of trust, among others that of assistant United States attorney for Utah, and who, as such, was charged with the duty of prosecuting these offenses, testi-

I prosecuted them (offenses of polygamous cohabitation) before the United States commissioners up until 1893, when the United States attorney refused to allow my accounts for services for that kind of work, and then I quit and confined my investigations before the grand

In explanation of his action he testified:

That he found the press was against the prosecutions; that the public prosecutor, whose attention he invited to the matter, refused to proceed. From this and other facts which came to his knowledge, Judge McCarthy reached the conclusion that the public sentiment was against interfering with men in their polygamous relations who had married before the manifesto.

I will quote from another witness. I want to quote just enough to show what the whole testimony was in this respect. Mr. E. B. Critchlow, a non-Mormon attorney at law of Salt Lake City, one of the principal managers of this proceeding against Mr. Smoot, who gave the case his personal attention, attending most of the meetings of committee, testified before the committee:

.That after the manifesto of 1890 there was no inclination on the part of the prosecuting officer to "push these matters as to present cohabitation," "thinking it was a matter that would immediately die out;" that it was well known that Apostle John Henry Smith was living in unlawful cohabitation; that non-Mormons generally made no objection to it; that they were disposed "to let things go," and that that was the general feeling from the time of the manifesto in 1890 "down to very recent times—pretty nearly up to date, or practically up to date."

I might read from numerous other witnesses, all to the same effect, to show that these peculiar situations and conditions were recognized by the whole people, and that when they undertook to prosecute there was no sentiment to support such prosecutions, and that by common consent matters were allowed to drift, upon the theory that it was only a question of time, and very long time, until all who were living in polygamous cohabitation would die off and that kind of cohabitation would of necessity cease. What they were industrious about was to prohibit further plural marriages.

But the situation in Utah is not peculiar in that respect. have here an extract from the Presbyterian and Reformed Review, volume 7, for 1896, from which I will read. The article from which I take this extract is entitled "The baptism of polygamists in non-Christian lands." I read this to show that wherever the church has gone and wherever it has encountered polygamy it has had the same character of trouble that it has had in Utah, and it has felt itself compelled to deal with it precisely as the people have been dealing with it in Utah. This

At the regular meeting of the synod of India, held in Ludhiana, November, 1894, among the most important questions which came before the synod was this: Whether in the case of a Mohammedan or Hindoo with more than one wife, applying for baptism, he should in all cases, as a condition of baptism, be required to put away all his wives but one. After a very thorough discussion, lasting between two or three sessions of the synod, it was resolved, by a vote of 36 to 10, to request the general assembly, "in view of the exceedingly difficult complications which often occur in the cases of polygamists who desire to be received into the church, to leave the ultimate decision of all such cases in India to the synod of India." The memorialists add: "It is the almost unanimous opinion of the members of the synod that, under some circumstances, converts who have more than one wife, together with their entire families, should be baptized."

Being limited as to time, I will ask permission to have printed in the Record the rest of the article, without stopping to read it. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The remainder of the article is as follows:

The remainder of the article is as follows:

Not only is it thus the fact that more than four-fifths of the members of the synod of India believe that it may sometimes be our duty, under the conditions of society in India, to baptize a polygamist without requiring him first to put away all his wives but one, but when the missionary ladies present during the sessions of synod, desirous of ascertaining the state of opinion among themselves on this subject, took a vote thereupon, of these thirty-six ladies, many of them intimately familiar with the interior of zenana life for years, all feeling no less hatred of polygamous marriage than their sisters in America, all but three signified their agreement with the majority of synod, of which minority of three two had been only a few days in India and were therefore without any experience touching the practical questions involved. Nor is this large majority of our missionaries singular in their belief on this subject.

When some years ago the question was debated in the Punjab missionary conference, in which a large number of the missionaries and eminent Christian laymen of all denominations took part, ten out of twelve of the speakers expressed the same opinion as that held by more than four-fifths of the synod of India to-day. So the Rev. Dr. James J. Lucas, of Saharanpur, says that the brethren who maintained the lawfulness of not requiring a polygamist to put away any of his wives as a prerequisite to baptism "are not even in a minority in the missionary body in India."

A few years ago the Madura Mission voted in fayor of baptizing such, provided they had contracted their marriages in ignorance and there was no equitable way of securing a separation. Their action was disapproved by the American board, but it none the less illustrates again what is the judgment of a large part of those who, living in India, are in most intimate relation to the living facts, and who are thus far better qualified to form a right decision than can be the wisest men at home.

Again, as bearing on the polygamist's duty, it should be noted that in the great majority of cases among the Hindoos the second marriage is contracted because of the first wife having no children. So that when the general assembly requires the polygamist convert to put away all wives but the first, it requires him not only to signalize his conversion by violating a contract held valid alike by his Christian rulers and a large part of his Christian brethren, but to do this in such a way as shall inflict the greatest amount possible of cruel injustice and suffering, by turning out of his house that wife who is the mother of his children (who will naturally in most cases have to go with her) and denying to her conjugal rights of protection and cohabitation which he had pledged her.

her.

The wrong involved is aggravated under the conditions of life in India, in that it will commonly be practically impossible for the wife turned off, whichever she be, to escape the suspicion of being an unchaste woman, and she will inevitably be placed in a position where, with good name beclouded and no lawful protector, she will be under the strongest temptation to live an immoral life. No doubt polygamy is wrong; but then, is not breach of faith and such injustice and cruelty to an innocent woman and her children also wrong? If there is a law against polygamy, is there not a law also against these things even more explicit and indubitable? In the case supposed both can not be kept. Which shall the man be instructed to break?

The general assembly of 1875 appears to have imagined that the injustice was done away by enjoining a man to "make suitable provision for her support that is put away, and for her children, if she have any." But this utterly fails to meet the case. For the breach of faith required remains, since the marriage contract, both according to Scripture and the law of all Christian lands, as well as of India, binds the husband not only to support, but equally to protection and cohabitation. But by the deliverance of 1875 all missionaries in non-Christian lands are directed by the general assembly to instruct the convert that, in order to baptism, he must keep the compact as regards the first particular, but break it as regards the others.

Moreover, the moral end sought will, even so, not be gained. The wife put away may live in a separate house and at a distance—but then polygamists sometimes keep different wives in different homes—and it will not be easy to persuade a Hindoo or Mohammedan community, especially if the man still continue to give her money as required by the assembly's law, that cohabitation really ceases.

Mr. FORAKER. That was the condition which obtained in

Mr. FORAKER. That was the condition which obtained in Utah. Not only the Mormons, but non-Mormons as well, as this testimony shows, agreed to accept the situation as it existed and to abide by it, and let time do the work of solving that difficulty.

Now, Reed Smoot, therefore, in acquiescing in it, in not standing up to proclaim against it, was doing only what every non-Mormon in that Territory and afterwards in that State, since it has been a State, was doing. So it is I say he is not responsible for polygamy in the first instance. He is not responsible for the church as it was organized and as it was conducted in its early years. He is not responsible for any of the misdeeds that are charged against it, but responsible only for himself and that which he has done relating to the church, as it has been in his day, and relating to good morals as we all understand and appreciate them. And having done no more than simply acquiesce in a condition which he could not control and for which he was not responsible, he has committed no offense for which he should be expelled from the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.
Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee which has reported the resolution now before the Senate desires to speak an hour and a half, and comity and fairness should undoubtedly accord it to him. But thirty-five minutes now remain before the arrival of the hour when he would expect to take the floor. There are several of us who would like to have a few minutes just to express in brief our reasons. Unless an arrangement is now made by which that can be accomplished, of course the opportunity will not be accorded. I suggest therefore that by unanimous consent further speeches may be limited to five minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that speeches during the further consideration of the resolution before the Senate

Mr. DANIEL. Until half past 2 o'clock. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Until half past 2 o'clock be limited to five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I shall probably not exceed ten minutes, but I can not consent until I have had that opportunity.

The Vice-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this question. I design simply to give the reasons for my vote in order that I may not be misunderstood.

For the first time during my service in the Senate I am called upon by my vote to pass on the question whether one holding a seat as a Senator here shall be excluded from this body. a matter of so great gravity it is due to myself that I shall state the ground upon which my vote will be placed.

I conceive that there can be no question devolving upon me a more definite and serious responsibility to decide this question for myself, with an eye single to the right and in accordance with the Constitution and the law, as in my honest judgment I may find them to require. It is not permissible that I shall be controlled in casting my vote by any personal or political consideration. Much less am I warranted in being influenced by the views and wishes of others. Such may be permissible in settling some questions; but in passing upon the question of the right of a member of this body to retain his seat, a Senator can only be guided and controlled by his own judgment and his conscience under his oath of office.

There is the obligation, in the first place, to respect and protect a Senator in the right and possession of his seat when legitimately entitled to it. That is a sacred right of which he should not be deprived if he has been legally elected, possesses the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution, and has not by any act of his, either before or since his election, made himself, in the opinion of Senators under their oaths, unfit to remain here as a Senator of the United States.

There is also the paramount duty to guard the Senate against the danger of instability in the tenure of office of its members.

Mr. President, I regard the Senate as the most valuable and the most important branch of the constitutional framework of our Government. It is the only branch of the Government which is clothed with legislative, executive, and judicial functions. It has been continuous in its organization and continuous in its membership from the foundation of the Government. Presidents come and go. The organization and official membership of the House of Representatives expire at the end of each period of two years. But since 1789 the organization of the Senate has been without interruption, and during all that time there has been a continuous membership, at each period, of more than a majority of Senators. It is the only branch of the Government in which it has been solemnly covenanted that in no manner, not even by constitutional amendment, shall there be change in the representation of each State in the Senate.

The tenure of office in such a body should be stable and not easily disturbed. It is a fundamental right of a State to be represented here by the men of its choice, having the qualifications prescribed in the Constitution.

In my opinion, after the most careful consideration of the question, that fundamental right is only subject to the right of the Senate, for any cause deemed by it sufficient, to expel a Senator by a two-thirds vote. In other words, in my opinion, after a Senator, with proper credentials from his State, has been duly sworn in and has taken his seat, if it be conceded that he has been legally elected, that he has attained the age of 30 years, that he has been nine years a citizen of the United States, and was when elected an inhabitant of the State for which he was chosen, he can only be expelled, or in any manner excluded from the Senate for any cause, by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, whether that cause arose before or after his admission to the Senate Election, age, citizenship, and residence, as prescribed by the Constitution, are essential to the title of a Senator to his seat. If either of these is lacking the incumbent may be excluded from the Senate by a majority vote of the Senators. As to any other objection to a Senator the Constitution makes no specification, but delegates all power regarding the ascertainment and determination of the same to the Senate. And as this is a tremendous and unlimited power the safeguard is thrown around each Senator by requiring that he can only be expelled by a two-thirds vote. Unless a Senator has title under the Constitution in the possession of the essentials prescribed by the Constitution, he is not entitled to enter and may be excluded by a majority. If he enters with such title, only by a two-thirds vote can he be excluded from the Senate.

In my opinion any other construction of the law, if accepted by the Senate as a rule of conduct, would be extremely dangerous to the security of the tenure of office in this body.

I do not undertake now to argue the proposition. I only state it as a conclusion upon which I shall base my vote, so far as concerns the rule of practice by which the Senate shall be guided in this case.

Several reasons are assigned why Senator Smoot should be excluded from the Senate. To prevent misunderstanding, I desire to state the ground on which I base the vote which I shall give in this case.

The fact that he is a Mormon and believes in the tenets and dogmas of the Mormon Church will not, in my opinion, justify his exclusion from the Senate. It would be an extremely dangerous precedent to exclude a Senator because of his religious or political belief, however erroneous we may believe that belief to be.

Mr. President, there are other alleged grounds upon which it is claimed that he should be excluded from the Senate. In some of these there are issues and conflicting contentions as to the facts, and differences in the construction proper to be placed upon acts alleged to have been done. These I pass by because of such conflicting contentions and of such uncertainty of facts and of construction. There is, however, one fact upon which there is no issue, because the fact is avowed by Senator Smoot himself.

He is not a polygamist. That is conceded, and is to his credit. He is, however, an apostle, one of the governing body of the church, empowered to give spiritual and temporal law and precept to its followers. It is conceded that he is and has been for years, both before and since his election to the Senate, in intimate official relationship and official cooperation and necessary official approval with other members of the governing officials of the church who have been, during all the time and still are, while such officials, in the open, notorious, defiant, and even boastful violation of law in living in undisguised, undisputed polygamous cohabitation. More than this, by his own avowal, while such official, as an apostle, he has voted to place in the highest office of the church Joseph F. Smith, who was at the time of his election, as he was before and has ever since continued to be, in the open, notorious, and defiant violation of law in living in undisguised, undisputed polygamous cohabitation; and in thus indorsing and continuing to the present time to support him as their head and chief, Senator Smoot has, during all these years, in the most pronounced and indisputable manner, held forth this violator and profaner of the law as one worthy to be by the people commended and approved as their fit teacher and exemplar.

Again, Mr. President, I do not undertake to argue the correctness of my conclusion. I only state it in order that it may be known on what ground my vote will be based.

Mr. President, after the most careful consideration, having regard to the gravity of the interests involved, I have reached the conclusion that Senator Smoot, in the language of the protestants, ought not to be permitted—testants, ought not to be permitted—to sit as a member of the United States Senate for reasons affecting the honor and dignity of the United States and their Senators in Coagress, and upon the grounds and for the reason that he is one of a selfperpetuating body of fifteen men who, constituting the ruling authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, or Mormon Church, claim, and by their followers are accorded the right to claim, supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of those under them in all matters whatsoever, civil and religious, temporal and spiritual, and who, thus uniting in themselves authority in church and state, do so exercise the same as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; who countenance and connive at violations of the laws of the State prohibiting the same, regardless of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood and of covenants made with the people of the United States, and who, by all means in their power, protect and honor those who in themselves violate the laws of the land and are guilty of practices destructive of the family and the home.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, as a member of the Com-

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections who acquiesced with the majority of the committee in the presentation of the report filed by the chairman in the last session, I feel the pressure of my duty to say a few words somewhat in the nature of a personal statement.

When the vote was taken in the committee I was in an unusual situation. I had just been appointed, without seeking the honor, as a member of the committee to fill a vacancy in its membership, and the first session which I had the opportunity to attend was the session which considered this report. In acquiescing in it I felt it to be my duty to reserve specifically the right to make a more careful examination of the voluminous record that had been presented in the case and the testimony upon which the report was based.

This privilege was freely accorded by my colleagues. I have had an opportunity in the year intervening to make a very careful study of the mass of testimony which had been submitted, and I feel bound to say to the Senate that I can not, without violating my sense of public duty, support the proposition to expel Senator Smoor from the seat which he holds under the commission which the State of Utah has given him.

I have, I think, about as deep prejudices against the Utah branch of the Mormon Church as anyone else. I do not like its history nor the record which it has made in the past, though I am aware that our judgments are fallible and imperfect. I need not add that I hate with a perfect malice the barbarism of polygamy. I regard the family as the unit not only of the State, but of society itself, and if I felt that in casting the vote which I am about to cast I was giving aid or comfort to that repulsive offense against our civilization I would under no circumstances cast such a vote.

I entered upon the examination of the question with a general impression that Senator Smoor was guilty of that crime. I find from the evidence that the crime is not only one of which he is innocent, but of which nobody seriously accuses him.

I think I have every reverence which men ought to have for the opinions and for the wishes of the Christian women of the United States, and the only burden that has been placed upon me in the vote which I am about to cast arises from the fact that I am not able to respond, as so many of them in my own State and in other States have desired, to the petitions for Senator Smoot's expulsion. I honor them for the deep interest they have taken in this subject. I fully recognize their right, which I have heard disputed here, to petition the Senate upon that subject. They are the guardians of the American home, and for that reason they are the safeguards of the social order. But I do not believe that any one of them in my own State or elsewhere would desire me to cast a vote here which I could not justify as right in the forum of my own conscience.

I recognize the force of the accusation made against Senator Smoot that he is mixed up with the crime of polygamy in Utah, and if he had not stood on the floor of the Senate and under the solemn obligations of his oath and his duty here cleared himself of sympathy with that conspiracy against the state, I would have forborne to utter a word here in his behalf. But no man occupying his position could have borne such testimony unless he was telling the exact truth about himself and about his people.

I have found out also since this debate opened that he does not appear as a witness on this question for the first time, but that for nearly twenty years among the young Mormons of Utah he has used his influence—that mighty influence arising from the purity of his example—in behalf of a better standard in the social life of the people among whom his lot has been cast. I know that the younger people of Utah are out of sympathy with the whole scheme of theology that has added to their religion the degradation of their family life.

Only two years ago I had the opportunity, traveling as one of the companions of the honored President of the Senate, to spend several days in the mountains of Utah. I took the testimony of many people—on the streets, in the hotels, and everywhere else. The unanimous expression of the younger people in Utah is that the crime of polygamy is in the way of ultimate and speedy extinction in that State and in that church. I never felt more respect for a public man than when I heard the President of the Senate, then a candidate for the office which he now holds, speaking in the old Brigham Young Theater, in Salt Lake City, to thousands of people, defend the ideal Christian home, and pay a tribute to that ideal fireside where one mother sits crowned with the love of the household; and the applause which swept over that great audience, composed mostly of young people connected with the Mormon Church, convinced me that we have less to fear from polygamy in the future development of that community than most of us have been prone to believe.

The whole frame of human nature is against it. The aspira-tions of the hearts of men, and, most of all, the intuitions of womanhood, the most gracious influence this world knows anything about, are at war with it. Economic forces, universal in their operation, tend to destroy it. If it has flourished in Utah in the past, not even the fanaticism of a misguided religious leadership has been able to make it acceptable to the people. A thousand forces tend to disintegrate it, and we may be certain that we are not living in a world in which a barbarism like that can make itself permanent even under the auspices of a church.

If the anxieties of those who have made the protest against Senator Smoor are well founded; if the church to which the great body of the people of Utah belong is in reality a criminal conspiracy to violate the law and to bring reproach upon the nation, the situation is not helped materially by the action which it is proposed to take here. It does not need an act of injustice even to one man and to his wife and children to emphasize our convictions upon the subject of polygamy. Such a treatment of the case may tend to irritate a condition which, if the opponents of Senator Smoot are correct, requires surgical treatment upon a more effective scale. At any rate, we may be assured that our institutions are not without resources to control the injury to the whole nation which would be involved either in a secret or open breach of the covenant which the people of Utah have entered into with the Government of the United States

The institution of the family is threatened from more than direction, and when these dangers are clearly perceived by the American people there will not be a dissenting voice among them to the amendment of our Constitution in such a way as to give uniformity and efficiency to the statutory regulation of marriage and divorce.

The Mormon Church, stronger no doubt in Utah than any single ecclesiastical institution ought to be, is a feeble and struggling affair everywhere else. In the State of Iowa the immediate descendants of Joseph Smith, the prophet, are at the head of a church institution based upon the Mormon revelation, which has been for half a century an influence for good throughout the entire community in which it has built its houses of worship. Its creed differs from the theology of Utah Mormonism only in its attitude toward the crime of polygamy and in the absence of all secret rituals. Its people are industrious, law-abiding, God-fearing men and women.

So that there is nothing in the articles of the Mormon faith, aside from the evil practices which grew up in Utah when it was an almost inaccessible desert, to alarm the people of the United States. It is a strange faith, incredible to us; but if its leaders, following the counsel of such men as REED SMOOT, are wise enough to set it free from the odium which has grown out of polygamy there would be few people in the United States willing to deny to it that freedom of worship which is one of the chief inheritances of the English-speaking race. It has taken many centuries of sacrifice and blood to win for mankind the right of every man to profess whatever religious faith he desires or to go his way without God or without hope in the world, if he prefers.

I acquit the opponents of Senator Smoot of any purpose to violate the traditions of religious liberty; but I could not be one of those who are willing to bring upon him and his little family the humiliation and contempt which would necessarily follow his expulsion from the Senate of the United States without taking the risk which I dare not assume, of laying upon a fellow-man a part, at least, of these burdens which, in other lands and in other ages, have been found too grievous to be borne.

I may be in the wrong; I can not be certain about it; but I prefer that my error should fie on the side of justice and fair dealing. Even if Mr. Smoot should continue to sit here for the few remaining months of his Senatorial term the American people lose none of the weapons with which they contend against the evils of which they complain in Utah.

But if we brand this man, against whom no word has been spoken here inconsistent with the respect with which he is held by all, and send him out from this Chamber as a male-factor, what have we done? We have, for the purpose of punishing the Mormon hierarchy for the countenance it has given to the crime of polygamy, driven out in disgrace from the office to which he has been constitutionally elected a man who, notwithstanding he was born in polygamy, notwithstanding his mouth has been closed by the sense of the honor which is due to the memory of his father and his mother, has made his way to a position of leadership in the church in which he was nurtured without turning aside from the path of virtue or by precept or example defiling the purity of his own home. This appears to me to be a strange programme; I can not consent to it.

Years ago I expressed in the House of Representatives, speaking on the question of the admission of Utah into the Union, my confidence in that far-off community, which had even then, by the thrift and industry of its inhabitants, wrought one of the fine miracles of our industrial progress as a nation. Notwithstanding all that has been said and all that has been printed, I still see for that people a future full of hope; a future in which the scandal and infamy of this offense against civilization will no longer handicap its progress or bring its people into dis-

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, after the credentials of Senator Smoor had been presented to the Senate, together with a protest against his being permitted to take the oath of office, the credentials, together with the protest, were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to investigate the right and title of REED SMOOT to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah.

The committee executed that mandate and reported to the Senate its conclusion, as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

This resolution is directly responsive to the order of the Senate, in whose possession it now is, together with all the testimony taken in the case, the report of the committee, and the views of the minority thereon, and the whole matter is now exclusively in the hands of the Senate for its final and deliberate The responsibility of the committee is now ended and that of the Senate begins.

Some question has been raised, in the course of the debate, as to the extent of the power of the Senate in cases of this character under Article I, section 5, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides

That each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

First, it is claimed that under this provision empowering the Senate to judge of the "qualifications" of its members, that the qualifications referred to are fixed by section 3 of Article I of the Constitution, which provides that-

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State from which he shall be chosen.

And, secondly, the contention is made that if the Senator should be found disqualified for any cause his connection with this body, having been admitted to membership, can only be severed by expulsion under another provision of the Constitution, which declares (Art. I, sec. 5):

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

Under the first head it is insisted that the Senate, in judging of the qualifications of a Senator, is restricted in its inquiry to the question of age, citizenship, and residence, and beyond that the inquiry can not go, and no other qualifications can be required or imposed. The junior Senator from Illinois, in his very able speech, stated the contention upon this point with great clearness:

The power that is given to the Senate under the Constitution is not to create Senators, but to judge of their qualifications. The States create the Senators. The qualifications to be judged are those I have already stated, prescribed in the Constitution itself. If the Senate find those qualifications exist for the applicant for a seat in this body from any given State, then under all precedents such Senator is entitled to take the oath of office and take his place among the members of this great legislative body.

If such contention can be maintained, that ends the controversy, for no one questions but that the senior Senator from Utah has, in the language of the Constitution, "attained to the age of 30 years, been nine years a citizen of the United States, and is an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen."

If the possession of these attributes constitutes the "be all and end all" of the qualifications of a Senator, then is the Senate helpless indeed. If this contention be sound, then Joseph F. Smith, the head of this organization to which the Senator belongs, possessing, as he does, the constitutional qualifications of age, citizenship, and residence, would be entitled to admission to this body if elected by the legislature of Utah, and his five wives and forty-three children could witness from the galleries of the Senate his triumphal entry, unquestioned and unopposed, into the membership of this august assembly.

It is impossible for me to give assent to such a doctrine, and I have been unable to find it sustained either in reason or upon authority, and the contention is resisted both upon principle and precedent, and can, in my judgment, find no warrant in either.

I submit that the provision of section 3, Article I, was not inserted with the view or for the purpose of determining or fixing the qualifications of Senators, but it was ingrafted into the Federal Constitution expressly as a limitation upon the power of the States in making selection of Senators, restricting the choice to a certain class of citizens. It excluded a certain class as being ineligible to the office of Senator. The object of it was to eradicate an evil which had grown up during the years of the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation. It was for the purpose of insuring a National Congress for the new Government which should be composed of a body of men of mature judgment, residents of the State or district, and thoroughly American.

Noah Webster, speaking of this provision of the Federal Constitution, said:

A man must be 30 years of age before he can be admitted into the Senate, which was likewise a requisite in the Roman Government. The places of Senators are wisely left open to all persons of suitable age and merit, and who have been citizens of the United States for nine years, a term in which foreigners may acquire the feelings and acquaint themselves with the interests of the native Americans.

A brief reference to the facts of history will suffice to show the exigency which called this constitutional provision into existence.

Under the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation there were no qualifications for membership as to age, residence, or citizenship, except such as the various colonies or States saw fit to impose, and which were as varied as the number of colonies or States, and of the 348 different individuals from the thirteen colonies who held seats in the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation from 1774 to 1788, the ages of the delegates varied from 16 to 76 years. Charles Pinckney, of North Carolina, a member of the Continental Congress, was but 19 years of age when elected to that body, and James Sykes, of Delaware, also of the Continental Congress, was only 16 years old when elected to Congress, and twenty-five members of that body were under 30 years of

With these instances before them, it was deemed expedient to place some restrictions in the Federal Constitution upon the power of the States in their choice of Senators and Representatives to the Federal Congress. This was but conforming to the practice under the Confederation. For instance, delegates were required to be appointed annually by the legislatures of the several States and were subject to recall, and no State could send less than two nor more than seven members, and then the following restriction was imposed:

No person shall be capable of being a delegate for more than three years in a term of six years.

It will be noted that there is a striking similarity between the wording of this prohibition upon the States in the Articles of Confederation and the wording of the prohibition in the Federal Constitution on the same subject.

No person shall be capable of being a Delegate, etc.— Declares the Articles of Confederation. No person shall be [capable of being] a Senator, etc. Says the Constitution. I insist that the manifest object of this provision was to correct those defects which had become apparent under the Government of the Confederation. It had become manifest that it was necessary to limit the States in their choice of members to the Federal Congress to persons of mature age, citizens of the United States, and to those who were residents of the district or State from which they were chosen. It was quite natural that the inhabitants of the colonies and of the Confederacy should fall into the practice of the English Government, where minors, aliens, and persons not residents of the political division for which they were elected were admitted to seats in the Commons, and I believe the practice obtains to-day for members of Parliament to stand for a constituency within whose district they do not reside.

The framers of the Constitution therefore sought by this provision to correct that practice by imposing upon the States a prohibition against the election of a certain class of citizens, to wit, those who were under 30 years of age and not citizens of the United States, and nonresident of the district or State for which they were elected.

An examination of this provision, coupled with the debate which occurred at the time of its adoption, shows conclusively, to my mind, that its object was not to prescribe the qualifications of Senators at all, but to restrict the States in their choice of Representatives to the National Congress. The committee of detail, in submitting the first draft of the Constitution upon this point reported this provision:

Every Member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years at least, shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least three years before his election, and shall be at the time of his election a resident of the State in which he shall be chosen.

In the course of the discussion of this provision, Mr. Dickinson, of Delaware, who had been a Delegate in the Colonial and Continental Congresses, a lawyer of repute and a graduate of the London Temple, opposed the provision in its entirety for the reason that it would be construed to be exclusive, saying:

I am against any recital of qualifications in the Constitution. It is impossible to make a complete one, and a partial one would, by implication, tie up the hands of the legislatures from supplying omissions.

Mr. James Wilson, also a member of the Convention, a lawyer of high standing, and a Delegate from Pennsylvania to the Contimental Congress, and to the Constitutional Convention, and a member of the committee of detail, opposed this proposition in the following language:

Besides, a partial enumeration of cases will disable the legislature from disqualifying odious and dangerous characters.

When, later on in the course of the discussion, it was proposed to add a property qualification, Mr. Wilson said that, in his opinion, it would be best, on the whole, to let the section go out entirely. This particular power would constructively exclude every other power of regulating qualifications. As the result of the discussion and following the suggestion of Mr. Wilson this provision was stricken out altogether, and the present language substituted therefor, thus changing it from an afirmative declaration of qualifications to a negative form; so that, instead of declaring in the case of a Representative that "each member of the House of Representatives shall be of the age of 25 years," etc., and "every member of the Senate shall be of the age of 30 years," etc., it was changed to read: "No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years," etc., and the provision in relation to the Senate modified, as follows: "No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years," etc.

The manifest purpose and intended effect of these provisions was to take a certain class of people from the whole body and make that class eligible, leaving to Congress the right to judge of the qualifications of the Senator or Representative when elected from this eligible list.

To my mind it is perfectly manifest that the reason for this change was to avoid the contention which is being made to-day, that this provision affirmatively fixes the qualifications for Members of Congress and that no other qualification can be imposed or inquired into.

The opinion of Thomas Jefferson ought to be valuable upon this point, who, in a letter to Mr. Cabell in 1814, speaking of this provision, said:

Had the Constitution been silent, nobody can doubt but that the right to prescribe all the qualifications and disqualifications of those they would send to represent them would have belonged to the State, so also the Constitution might have prescribed the whole and excluded all others. It seems to have preferred the middle way. It has exercised the power in part by declaring some disqualifications, to wit, those of not being 25 years of age, of not having been a citizen seven years, and of not being an inhalitant of the State at the time of election. But it did not declare itself that the Member shall not be a lunatic, a pauper, a convict of treason, of murder, of felony, or other infamous crimes, or nonresident of the district, (Jefferson's Works, vol. 6, p. 309.)

In Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, third edition, page 138, is

The power given to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, each to pass upon the validity of the elections of its own members and upon their personal qualifications seems to be unbounded. * * Indeed, there is absolutely no limitation upon its exercise except the responsibility of the representatives to their constituents. Under it the House has applied the test of personal loyalty to those claiming to be duly elected Representatives, deeming this one of the qualifications of which it might judge.

In the Maryland contested election John Randolph, of Virginia, said:

ginia, said:

Mark the distinction between the first and second paragraphs. The first is affirmative and positive: "They shall have the qualifications necessary to the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature." The second merely negative: "No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of 25 years," etc. No man could be a Member without these requisites. If the Constitution had meant (as was contended) to have settled the qualifications of Members, its words would have naturally ran thus: "Every person who has attained the age of 25 years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State from which he shall be chosen, shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives." But, so far from fixing the qualifications of Members of that House, the Constitution merely enumerates a few disqualifications within which the States were left to act. It said to the States: "You have been in the habit of electing young men barely of age. You shall send us none but such as are five and twenty. Some of you have elected persons just naturalized. You shall not elect any to this House who have not been seven years citizens of the United States. Sometimes merely solourners and transient persons have been clothed with legislative authority. You shall elect none whom your laws do not consider as inhabitants." Thus guarding against the great laxity in the State legislatures by general and negative provisions, leaving them, however, within the limits of those requirements, to act for themselves, to consult the genius, habits, and, if you will, the prejudices of their people.

In the case of Philip F. Thomas, who, in 1867, claimed a seat

In the case of Philip F. Thomas, who, in 1867, claimed a seat in the Senate as Senator from the State of Maryland—to which case further reference will hereafter be made-Mr. Edmunds, recognized as one of the ablest lawyers in the Senate at that time, said:

Now, to return, the question first is: What are our rights under the Constitution over this man without regard to the statute and without regard to any overruling necessity? The Constitution declares, and that is all that it says upon the subject that is pertinent here:

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 20 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of 30 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."

Senators will observe that there are negative statements; they are exclusive, every one of them. It is not declaring who shall be admitted into the Senate of the United States. It is declaring who shall not be eligible to election to this body; that is all. It is the same as to the House of Representatives and as to other officers—always in the negative, always exclusive, instead of in the affirmative and inclusive. And upon what principle was this Constitution founded? Will lawyers here deny that we have a right to look to the course of constitutional and parliamentary jurisprudence in that country from which we derive our origin and most of our laws to illustrate our own Constitution and to enlighten us in this investigation? By no means. And what was that? The House of Commons in Parliament, using the very language that in another section of the Constitution is used here, were the exclusive judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their own members. What was their constitutional power under that rule? It was that they were the sole and exclusive judges, not only of the citizenship and of the property qualification of persons who should be elected, but of everything that entered into the personnel of the man who presented himself at the doors of the House of Commons with a certificate of election for admission. And what were those rules? One was that an idiot could not be a representative in the Commons; another was that an insane man could not be; and a variety of other disqualifications, of which the Commons themselves alone were the sole and exclusive judges.

We declared in our Constitution that a certain class of persons should never, under any circumstances, whatever their other qualifications of its members, and there we stopped the rule of disqualification, leavin repeat, therefore, that this provision of the Constitution was evidently intended to be nothing more than a statement of a few of the many disqualifications which would or might render one unfit to hold the office of a Senator and to make ineligible all persons laboring under the disabilities named, and leaving the question of qualifications in other respects to be determined by the Senate according to the facts in each particular case, under the right conferred by the Constitution to judge of the qualifications of its own members. To contend otherwise would be to assert that the fathers who framed our Constitution deliberately intended that an idiot, a lunatic, an enemy of the Government, or a notorious criminal must be allowed a place in the Senate if of proper age, residence, and citizenship. I submit that no such interpretation of that clause of the Constitution is justifiable or reasonable, and that the provision in question must be interpreted as being a limitation, to a certain extent, upon the powers of the State in choosing members to the Senate, This contention, I insist, is sustained not only in reason, but upon authority.

From a large number of cases which have been considered and decided by the Senate and in the House of Representatives I shall refer to a few only.

In the year 1842 John M. Niles was elected to the Senate from the State of Connecticut for the term beginning March 4, 1843. When his credentials were presented, the Senate adopted a resolution by which a select committee, consisting of five members, was chosen, and in the language of the resolution were Instructed to inquire into the election, returns, and qualifications of the said John M. Niles and into his capacity at this time to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

There was no question that Mr. Niles was 30 years of age, was a citizen of the United States, and had resided in the State from which he was chosen for the full length of time required by the Constitution. The objection to him was that he was not of sound mind. The committee found that he was mentally competent, and he was thereupon permitted to take his seat as a member of the Senate. Had it been determined that he was insane, then according to the construction of the Constitution, for which some contend, the Senate would have had no alternative but to admit Mr. Niles to his seat and then inflict upon him the humiliation and disgrace of an expulsion from the Senate for no fault of his, but because he was the victim of a terrible misfortune.

In the year 1867 Philip F. Thomas was elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of Maryland for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1867. His credentials were presented to the Senate on the 18th day of March of that year, and were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The case was duly considered in committee and by the Senate, and the resolution adopted by the Senate was as follows:

That Philip F. Thomas, having voluntarily given aid, countenance, and encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility to the United States, is not entitled to take the oath of office as a Senator of the United States from the State of Maryland, or to hold a seat in this body as such Senator, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate inform the governor of the State of Maryland of the action of the Senate in the promises. Senate in the premises.

This resolution was based on the fact that Mr. Thomas had resigned his place in the Cabinet of President Buchanan because of his opposition to the determination of the Administration to reenforce the garrison in Charleston Harbor, and also that when the son of said Thomas entered the military service of the Confederacy Mr. Thomas had given to his son $100 in money, "not to aid him to go to the rebellion, but in case he were imprisoned or in suffering he might have a sum of money by him?" (See 1992) him." (Senate Election Cases, 3d ed., p. 333.)
There was no possible question as to the possession by Mr. by him.

Thomas of the constitutional qualifications of age, citizenship, and inhabitancy; but he was denied a seat in the Senate by the vote of a majority of the Members thereof, because, in the opinion of the Senate, his antecedents, associations, and acts had been such as to render him unfit to be a member of that body and to assist in making laws for the nation to which he was believed to be unfriendly.

In the case of Brigham H. Roberts, decided by the House of Representatives in 1900, there was no contention in regard to the constitutional qualifications of Mr. Roberts; but he was not permitted to take his seat in the House because of the fact that he was a polygamist. As the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this case demonstrates, the case of Mr. Smoot does not differ materially from that of Mr. Roberts and calls, I submit, for the same judgment.

The construction for which I contend finds abundant support in the language of the text-books. In addition to the view before cited from Pomeroy's Constitutional Law, the following may well be noted. Troope on Public Offices, section 73, says:

The general rule is that the legislature has full power to prescribe qualifications for holding office in addition to those prescribed by the Constitution, if any, provided that they are reasonable and not opposed to the constitutional provision or to the spirit of the Constitution.

And Cushing, in Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 195, section 477, says:

To the qualifications of this kind may be added those which may result from the commission of such crime which would render the member ineligible.

In Paschal's Annotated Constitution, pages 84 and 85, occurs the following:

the following:

The "qualifications" in its narrower sense would doubtless relate to the age, citizenship, and inhabitancy of the applicant as defined in the second clause of section 2, Article I, and the third clause of section three of the same. But as the term "person," if taken alone in both, might include a female, a lunatic, or an idiot, a convicted felon, a person of notoriously bad character, or actually at war with the United States, as during the rebellion, or one coming from a State all of whose inhabitants are at war with the United States, the term "qualifications" has in practice received a more enlarged signification. Thus, in the case of Mr. Niles in 1846 (sic) a committee was raised in the Senate to Inquire into his mental capacity: the rebellion has caused a test oath which might reach persons in all the States, and does embrace majorities in some of them; a concurrent resolution was passed in 1866 in regard to the States lately in rebellion, which, it was urged, limited this independent power of each House: the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution looks to a new disqualification, and all the reconstruction acts, it has been argued, intrench upon this right. At the time of this writing one committee is investigating the subject of the disqualifications of certain Members from Kentucky and another the question as to whether Maryland has a "republican form of government" within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. President, it is contended in behalf of Senator Smoot

Mr. President, it is contended in behalf of Senator Smoot that even if it were to be conceded that the Senate has the right to inquire into the qualifications of Senator Smoot regards his past history, his associations, his acts, and his fitness to be a Senator from the State of Utah, still Mr. Smoot, having taken the oath of office as a Senator, can not be excluded from the Senate or in any way removed from this body except by expulsion, requiring a two-thirds vote. It is proposed, as I understand, to amend this resolution so as to require a two-thirds vote by inserting, after the word "Re-solved," the words "two-thirds of the Senate concurring," and thereby erect an additional barrier behind which the Senator from Utah may more securely take refuge.

It is admitted that if the status of Senator Smoot at the time he presented himself for admission in this body was such as would have justified his exclusion, then the same status or condition continuing until this time would justify his removal by a majority vote. However, I have no desire to discuss that question at length, because to my mind it is not material and therefore of minor importance.

The established rule in the Senate has been that whenever one has presented himself claiming the right to a seat in that with credentials which upon their face were fair and regular in form but whose right to a seat was challenged for any reason, the almost uniform practice has been to admit him to a seat and inquire into his qualifications afterwards. Such was the course pursued in the case of Albert Gallatin, of Pennsylvania, in 1793; of Asher Robbins, of Rhode Island, in 1833; of James Shields, of Illinois, in 1849; of James Harlan, of Iowa, in 1853, and in a great number of other cases which might be cited.

In the case of Asher Robbins, Mr. Clay said:

It is not only the right of Rhode Island, but of every State to have two voices on every question which could arise, and the first act of the Senate by which the States could be secured in this right was the verification of those who composed that body. It was the right and the important duty of the Senate to say who were to be the Senators and who were the individuals to be associated in the performance of the important duties which devolved upon them. It was now time to decide (not conclusively, he admitted) who were the two members from the State of Rhode Island to be admitted to their seats. The question would then come up as to the ultimate right of either of the contesting members. * *

In the case of James Shields, Mr. Douglas said:

It appears from the credentials now on your table that James Shields was elected a Senator of the United States by the legislature of Illinois for six years from the 4th instant. His credentials are in due form and entitle him to a seat in this body. He stands in precisely the same position in which other Senators stood, who were yesterday admitted to seats, and if there is any objection on the ground of ineligibility, it must arise after he has been sworn and after he has taken his seat.

The same view was expressed by Mr. Turney, Mr. Badger, Mr. Butler, and Mr. Webster.

Mr. Gallatin, Mr. Shields, and Mr. Harlan were each found to be disqualified for membership in the Senate and were excluded therefrom.

And, in the very case now under consideration, after the credentials of Mr. Smoot and the protest against his admission to this body had been received, and the Senate had been fully informed concerning the same, when Mr. Smoot was about to take the oath of office as a Senator, Mr. Hoar said:

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, before the names of the duly elected Senators are called, to make a statement in behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which is important to the public to understand. It will take but a moment. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], is obliged to be absent. He desired me to state in his behalf that he understands the orderly and constitutional method of procedure in regard to administering the oath to newly elected Senators to be that when any gentleman brings with him or presents a credential consisting of the certificate of his due election from the executive of his State he is entitled to be sworn in, and that all questions relating to his qualifications should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards.

If there were any other procedure the result would be that a third of the Senate might be kept out of their seats for an indefinite time on the presenting of objection without responsibility and never established before the Senate by any judicial inquiry. The result of that might be that a change in the political power of this Government which the people desire to accomplish would be indefinitely postponed.

And in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elec-

And in the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in the case of David T. Corbin, reported in 1877, Mr. Cameron of Wisconsin making the report, it was declared Swearing in a Senator on his credentials has always been regarded as admitting him to his seat on the prima facie case made by those credentials. There is no instance in the history of the Senate where a member has been sworn in and allowed to take his seat as Senator that such admission has been held to preclude investigation into the merits of his title. On the other hand, the precedents are exactly the reverse. The cases of James Shields, of Illinois; James Harlan, of Iowa; Bright and Fitch, of Indiana, and of Mallory, of Florida, * * * are examples of this rule.

And the effect of these decisions of the Senate which have been cited, and of the arguments quoted in their support, can not be evaded by the claim that in some of these cases the Senator was excluded after being sworn because of such disqualifications as are mentioned in the Constitution. When it is once conceded that the Senate may inquire into other disqualifications than those enumerated in the Constitution, then the same rule must, in reason, apply to cases where the disqualification claimed is not one of those enumerated in the Constitution as well as to those cases in which the claimed disqualification is mentioned in that instrument. There could be no reason for any different application of the rule in these two classes of cases. If the Senate may inquire whether one is disqualified for membership in that body because of want of character and fitness to occupy the high and responsible position of a Senator, then the same rule would obtain that would be applicable if it were asserted that he lacked the qualification of age, residence, or citizenship. The question all the time is whether one is disqualified at the very time he presents himself for admission into the Senate under his credentials. If he is disqualified because of the fact that he is a criminal, or in any other respect unfit for admission into the Senate, it is the same, so far as the application of the rule is concerned, as if he were disqualified for want of age, want of residence, or want of citizenship. So there is no ground whatever for the contention that in the one case the occupant of a seat in the Senate may be excluded therefrom by a majority vote, while in the other the only way of getting rid of him must be by expulsion. If one who is admitted to the Senate was, at the time of his admission, unfit to hold the office by reason of a mental or moral defect, it would be precisely the same, so far as his right to a seat in the Senate is concerned, as if he were unfit to occupy a seat in the Senate by reason of want of age.

Mr. President, I regret to have gone over this legal argument so hurriedly, but I am admonished of the limited time at my

Mr. President, whether the case is to be decided by a majority or a two-thirds vote is of little moment.

The greater question is whether the Utah hierarchy, of which Senator Smoot is a member, with its confessed law-breaking and law-defying character, shall be permitted to place its representative in this high council chamber of the nation. The issue, so far as it relates to Mr. Smoot, is of momentary concern, but the opinion of the Senate upon this greater question is far-reaching and all-commanding.

I shall spend no time with the contention that Mr. Smoot is not a polygamist. I said in my opening argument that it was conceded he was not. How my friend from Iowa [Mr. Dolli-VER] could have obtained the impression that it was so charged, and how anybody in the country could have entertained such an opinion I can not understand. I have examined the numerous petitions which have been sent to the Senate, and I desire to say that the charges made in the petitions are not that Mr. Smoor is a polygamist, but that he is a member of a hierarchy that dominates and controls the State of Utah, believes in and practices polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, and is, in fact, a criminal organization. That is the charge. Nobody understands it better than the Senate, and nobody understands it better than the four million women in this country who ask that Mr. SMOOT may be excluded from the Senate.

I shall spend no time, therefore, in discussing the question whether Mr. Smoot is a polygamist. Not only is there no such charge in the main protest, but at the very outset of the investigation it was stated that no proof would be offered in support of such contention. From the beginning to the end of the investigation not one solitary word was submitted to the committee on that point, and all this talk about Mr. Smoor's being unjustly charged with being a polygamist must be for effect, for everybody knows that there was no effort to prove such allegation.

As to the oath of disloyalty, I will not go over that again. Mr. Smith, the head of the organization, testified that there was an obligation taken, and that it has never been changed. The obligation was proved to have been-

You covenant and promise that you will pray and never cease to pray Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and your children's children to the third and fourth generations.

And every witness in support of Mr. Smoot, from Joseph Smith to Mr. Smoot himself, bluntly and absolutely refused to disclose what the obligation was. Where else in this broad land is there a Christian organization that has an oath-bound order secret—whose obligations it dare not and will not disclose?

Mr. President, I have no purpose to enter into a reargument or a re-presentation of the reasons which controlled the majority of the committee in reporting to the Senate the resolution that Mr. Smoot is not entitled to a seat in this body. My views upon that question were fully expressed in the opening of the debate and I have nothing to add thereto, nor have I anything I may be permitted to say, however, that whatever strictures have been passed upon the sufficiency of the proof in support of the various allegations in the protest, there are support of the various anegations in the protest, there are some things about which there is not, and can not be, the slightest controversy, and which are not disputed.

As to the general character of the governing body of this organization, the criminal practices of its leading members, their open defiance of the law, their flagrant disregard of the manifesto of 1890, their continued belief in the rightfulness of polygamy as a divine institution, their open, persistent practice of polygamous cohabitation, their avowed declaration of their determination to persist in the practice so long as they live, that such organization is pronounced by the courts of this country to be a criminal organization, and that Senator Smoot is a member of such organization is placed beyond the pale of controversy. No one can, no one will presume to deny this.

In confirmation of this statement I will read briefly from the testimony. Let us see whether these facts are not established. Out of their own mouths we will judge them. Joseph Smith, the head of the organization, testified as follows:

Mr. Tayler. You have stated, as I recall it, that you were one of those who signed the plea for amnesty in 1891.

Mr. Smith. That is correct.

Mr. Tayler. With you were all of the leading officers of the church—that is to say, the first presidency and the twelve apostles—who were in the country available to sign that plea. Is that correct? * * * Mr. Smith. Yes, sir; I believe so. I think their names are there.

Mr. Tayler. That plea for amnesty, besides pledging the abandonment of the practice of taking plural wives, also pledged the signers of that petition and all others over whom they could exercise any control to an obedience of all the laws respecting the marriage relation? Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler. You say that there is a State law forbidding unlawful cohabitation?
Mr. Smith. That is my understanding.
Mr. Tayler. And ever since that law was passed you have been violating it?
Mr. Smith. I think likely I have been practicing the same thing even before the law was passed. * * *
Mr. Tayler. You have not in any way changed your relations to these wives since the manifesto or the passage of this law of the State of Utah? * * You have caused them to bear you new children—all of them?
Mr. Smith. That is correct, sir.

of them?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you have five wives? Mr. SMITH. I have. I have had eleven children born since 1890.

Mr. Tayler. Were those children by all your wives—that is, did all of your wives bear children?

Mr. Smith. All of my wives bore children. * * * I have had born to me eleven children since 1890, each of my wives being the mother of from one to two of those children.

I should like to repeat in connection with this question that it is a well-known fact throughout all Utah, and I have never sought to disguise that fact in the least or to disclaim it, that I have five wives in Utah.

My friends all know that. Captillar and the state of the s

My friends all know that—Gentiles and Jews and Mormons. They all knew that I had five wives.

Francis M. Lyman, an apostle next in line to President Smith for promotion, was asked this question to Senator Hoar:

Senator Hoar. * * You have said more than once that in living in polygamous relations with your wives, which you do and intend to do, you knew that you were disobeying this revelation. * * * And that in disobeying this revelation you were disobeying the law of God?

Mr. Lyman. Yes, sir.

Senator Hoar. Very well. So that you say that you, an apostle of your church, expecting to succeed, if you survive Mr. Smith, to the office in which you will be the person to be the medium of Divine revelations, are living and are known to your people to live in disobedience of the law of the land and of the law of God?

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Abraham H. Cannon, one of the apostles, in June, 1896, went to the Pacific coast with Joseph F. Smith, the president of the church, and a Miss Hamlin. She was unmarried when they left, but when they came back she and Cannon were living together as man and wife, and Mr. Cannon confessed that he married this woman and stated to his wife before leaving that he was going to California to marry Miss Hamlin.

Mr. TAYLER. What inquiry did you make to find out whether Abraham H. Cannon, one of the twelve apostles of the church, had made a plural

H. Cannon, one of the twelve apostles of the church, had made a plural marriage?

Mr. SMITH. I made no inquiry at all.

Mr. TAYLER. Did you set on foot any inquiry?

Mr. SMITH. No. sir; not myself.

Mr. TAYLER. Did you have any interest in finding out whether there had been?

Mr. SMITH. Not the least.

The Chairman. * * * In any instance where you have learned that these high officials or anyone else have been guilty of plural marriage or of perfoming a ceremony of that kind since 1890, have you made inquiry into it? * * * Mr. Smith. No, sir; because it has not been my business.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES E. MERRILL.

Mr. Merrill. I was first married in the spring of 1887. * * * * She died in the fall of 1889. * * * I was married to my legal wife in 1891. * * * Her name was Chloe Hendricks. * * * * she married to my legal wife in 1891. * * * Her name was Chloe Hendricks. * * * * Mr. Tayler. Have you had children by her?

Mr. Merrill. Yes, sir, * * * five.

Mr. Tayler. Have you another wife?

Mr. Merrill. Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler. When were you married to her?

Mr. Merrill. In the fall of 1888. * * In Logan. * * * Mr. Tayler. How many children have you had by her?

Mr. Merrill. How many children have you had by her?

Mr. Merrill. Four. * * * The oldest one is coming 9 years old and the youngest one is something like 2½ years old. * * Mr. Tayler. Who married you in 1891?

Mr. Merrill. My father.

Mr. Tayler. When were you married?

Mr. Merrill. I could not give you the exact date, but it was in March. * * Mr. Tayler. Was your father then an apostle?

Mr. Merrill. I could not give you the March. * * * Mr. Tayler. Was your father then an apostle?
Mr. Merrill. Yes, sir. * * * * Mr. Tayler. Were you living with Annie Stoddard at the time you married what you call your legal wife?
Mr. Merrill. Yes, sir. * * * * The Chairman. How many wives have you living now?
Mr. Merrill. Two.
The Chairman. You are cohabiting with both of them?
Mr. Merrill. Yes, sir.
(Chomas H. Merrill testified:

Thomas H. Merrill testined:

Mr. Tayler. Are you a son of Apostle Merrill?

Mr. Thomas H. Merrill. Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler. What official position do you hold?

Mr. Thomas H. Merrill. Bishop of the Richmond ward.

Mr. Tayler. How many wives have you?

Mr. Thomas H. Merrill. I have two.

Mr. Tayler. How many children have you by them?

Mr. Thomas H. Merrill. I have six living children by the first and four living children by the second.

My youngest child by my first wife will be 14 months old the 15th of this month. The youngest child of my second wife was 3 years old the 25th day of last January.

TESTIMONY OF ALMA MERRILL.

Mr. Tayler. You are a son of Apostle Merrill?
Mr. Alma Merrill. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. What official position do you hold in the church?
Mr. Alma Merrill. I am a member of the presidency of Benson ake.

TESTIMONY OF ANDREW JENSON.

Senator Hoar. * * * If any Mormon, having heard Mr. Smith's testimony here, were to go back to Utah and swear that he heard him say that here and insist on his being prosecuted, he would do an act which would be odious to all good Mormons, would he not? That is the feeling, is it not?

Mr. Jenson. I think so. Yes; I think so.

TESTIMONY OF BRIGHAM II. ROBERTS.

Mr. Tayler. You have been married how many times?
Mr. Roberts. I have been married three times. * * I was married to my first wife in 1877, to my second wife in 1886, and to my third wife in 1890. * * *
Mr. Tayler. You have had children born of this first plural wife, Celia Dibble, since you were elected to Congress in 1898?
Mr. Roberts, Yes, sir. * * * The last children were born some two years ago.
Mr. Tayler. Where were you married to your third wife?
Mr. Roberts, In Salt Lake City.
Mr. Tayler. By whom?
Mr. Roberts. By Daniel H. Wells. * * * I do not know that I can say just where.

It was in a house on First street, in Salt Lake City. * * * It was in the month of April. * * * There were no witnesses. * * * Daniel H. Wells at that time was sustained as counselor to the apostles. He had been a counselor to President Brigham Young, and was continued in that capacity—that is, as counselor to the twelve apostles, who were during an interim the presiding authorities of the church. * * *

Mr. TAYLER, You say that you have no recollection of anybody being present at the ceremony? * * * Was either of your other wives present?

Mr. ROBERTS. Neither of them. * * *
Senator OVERMAN. Did your first wife or your second wife consent to your marrying the third wife?

Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir. * *

Yet it is one of the rules of this organization that when one

Yet it is one of the rules of this organization that when one takes a plural wife the consent of the other wives must first be obtained.

The Chairman, Did they know of it at the time?
Mr. Roberts, Not at that time.
Mr. Tayler. When did they learn of it? * * *
Mr. Roberts. Two or three years afterwards, I think.
The Chairman. You understand at that time that the marriage was

Mr. ROBERTS. Two or three years afterwards, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. You understand at that time that the marriage was illegal?

Mr. ROBERTS. I did. * * * *
Senator Dubois. Did Mr. Wells represent the authorities?

Mr. ROBERTS. I think likely he did.
Senator Dubois. Then you took your plural wife with the knowledge and consent of the authorities, did you not?

Mr. ROBERTS. I did not know of any of them having any knowledge of it except Mr. Wells. * * *

Mr. ROBERTS. I did not know of any of them having any knowledge of it except Mr. Wells. * *

Mr. ROBERTS. You have no record, and there is no record, so far as you know, of the marriage?

Mr. ROBERTS. None that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time of your last marriage, did the party who performed the ceremony know that you had wives living?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir. * * He had previously married me to my second wife.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he know you had a wife before that? * *

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So that at the time the last ceremony was performed by him as a leading member of the church he knew you had two living wives?

Mr. ROBERTS. He did. * *

Senator PETTUS. Did he authorities of the church, when they learned of this marriage, take any action against the official?

Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir.

Senator PETTUS. Did he continue his relation as counselor?

Mr. ROBERTS. He did; to the time of his death. * *

The CHAIRMAN. Did any of the apostles take any action about it * * or reprimand you for it?

Mr. ROBERTS. No, sir. * * In explanation of that conduct I wish to say that * * I believed that doctrine and believed it to be a commandment of God. I knew that the law of God was in conflict with the statutes enacted by Congress. I regarded it as binding upon my conscience to obey God rather than man, and hence I accepted that doctrine and practiced it; that is all. *

The CHAIRMAN. And you are clearly living in defiance of the law of the law?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you are disregarding both the law of God and the law of man?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator whether these instances occurred prior to the manifesto or afterwards?

Mr. BURROWS. Some were prior to the manifesto and some afterwards. From three to five of the apostles have taken plural wives since the manifesto.

TESTIMONY OF ANGUS M. CANNON.

Mr. TAYLER. Mr. Cannon, when were you first married?
Mr. CANNON. On the 18th day of July, 1858.
Mr. TAYLER. To whom were you next married?
Mr. CANNON. To Sarah Maria Mousley.
Mr. CANNON. To Sarah Maria Mousley.
Mr. TAYLER. By the same hour do you mean by the same ceremony?
Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; at the same time.
I was next married to Mrs. Clara C. Mason.
We I think it was in September, 1875.
We I was next married to Maria Bennion.
We On the 11th of March.
1886.
We I was married to Johanna C. Danielson in the fall of 1886.
Mr. TAYLER. Are all your wives living?
Mr. CANNON. They are.
We I have families by five of them.

Mr. TAYLER. How many children have been born to you since the manifesto?

Mr. CANNON. Three.

It will be remembered that the manifesto not only prohibited the taking of plural wives, but prohibited cohabitation with those taken before the manifesto, and when that proclamation was issued by Mr. Woodruff, the president of the church, he having plural wives, instantly abandoned the practice, providing for his plural wives, but living only with his lawful wife. Mr. Smith says he can not do that with his five wives. He must live with all of them, because that is the very nut of the controversy.

Mr. TAYLER. How many children have been born to you since the manifesto?

Mr. Cannon. Three. * *

The Chairman. Since that time you have cohabitated with these wives?

Mr. Cannon. It has been my practice, if I can not live the law as the Lord gives it to me, I come as near to it as my mortal frailty will enable me to do. * *

The Chairman. Then, in cohabiting with these wives since the manifesto, you have violated the law of God, have you not?

Mr. Cannon. I presume I did. * *

The Chairman. Then you, as a patriarch, are violating both the law of your church and the law of the land?

Mr. Cannon. Yes: I am only mortal.

The Chairman. Do you not recognize these wives as wives?

Mr. Cannon. I do.

The Chairman. Publicly?

Mr. Cannon. I am doing so now.

The Chairman. * * * Do you intend to continue polygamous cohabitation?

Mr. Cannon. I will have to improve if I do not.

habitation?

Mr. Cannon. I will have to improve if I do not.
The Chairman. Then, in other words, you intend to continue to violate the law of the land and law of God. as you understand it?

Mr. Cannon. I intend to try and be true to the mothers of my children until death deprives me of the opportunity.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE REYNOLDS.

Mr. TAYLER. How many wives have you?
Mr. REYNOLDS. I have two. My legal wife is dead. My other two are plural wives and are living at the present time.
The CHAIRMAN. You have children by these two wives you are living

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have children by my two plural wives. sir. * * *
The last one born of the woman my third wife was born probably sixteen or eighteen months ago. * * The youngest by the other wife is five or six years old now. * * * I have had thirty-two children by the three wives.

Senator McComas. Did they or you, in your high place, ever make any endeavor to check the practice of polygamy and to impress upon people their obligations to obey the law of the land?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I don't know what the others did, but I never have. Senator McComas. And, so far as you know, your associates never did either?

did either?

Mr. Reynolds. As far as my knowledge is concerned I have no recollection of having heard them.

Senator McComas. Have you heard or do you know of any concerted effort on the part of those higher in authority than yourself, the first presidency and the apostles, to have people obey the law of the land and not continue to encourage plural marriages and not practice polygamy?

Mr. Reynolds. No, sir; I know of no concerted effort.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN HENRY HAMLIN,

Mr. Tayler. What relation are you to Lillian Hamiin?
Mr. Hamlin. Brother.
Mr. Tayler. She is younger than you? * * * How much younger

Younger?

Mr. Hamlin, Possibly ten years.

Mr. Tanler.

M

Mr. TAYLER.

"A man speaking now of the time immediately prior to the time when she was married.

"A mr. Hamlin. That she was married to a Mr. Cannon.

Mr. Hamlin. That she was married to a Mr. Cannon.

Mr. Tayler. What was his first name?

Mr. Hamlin. Abram.

Mr. Tayler. An apostle of the church?

Mr. Hamlin. I believe so. I understand so.

Mr. Tayler. And where did you understand she was married?

Mr. Hamlin. On the Pacific coast.

Mr. Tayler. Ry whom?

Mr. Hamlin. Well. our understanding was that President Joseph F.

Smith married her.

Mr. Tayler. Has she a child?

Mr. Tayler. Has she a child?

Mr. Hamlin. Yes; she has a child.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. On the Pacific coast.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Hamlin. No. sir.

The Chairman.

Mr. Tayler.

Mr. Hamlin. No. sir.

The Chairman. Do you know whether this child inherits any of the property?

Mr. Hamlin. It does.

The Chairman. Of the Cannon estate?

Mr. Hamlin. It does.

The Chairman. There never has been one understanding or impression, or talk in the family respecting it, except that your sister Lillian married Abram Cannon a few weeks before he died, and that Joseph F.

Smith married them. There has never been any variation from that subject. has there?

Mr. Hamlin. No, sir.

TESTIMONY CF GEORGE H. BRIMHALL.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE H. BRIMHALL.

Mr. TAYLER. What official position do you hold in the university

Mr. TAYLER, What contain positions of it. * * * I became president last January. * * * Mr. Tayler. Are you a polygamist?

Mr. BRIMHALL. I have two wives. * * I was married to my first wife in 1874 and to my second wife in 1885, as I remember it now. * * *

Mr. TAYLER. How many children have been born to you since 1890? Mr. BRIMHALL. Four, I think. Mr. TAYLER. How many by the plural wife since 1890? Mr. BRIMHALL. I think it is the four.

TESTIMONY OF JOSIAH HICKMAN.

Mr. TAYLER. How many wives have you?
Mr. HICKMAN. I have one living.
Mr. TAYLER. You married first in 1884 or 1885, did you?
And again in 1890?
Mr. HICKMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. And the first wife died when?

Mr. Hickman. Ten years ago the 2d of last November.
Mr. Tayler. And the wife you married in 1890, who was at the time you were married your plural wife—that is correct, is it?
Mr. Hickman. If I understand your question rightly, it is.
Mr. Tayler. She is your present wife?
Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir. * * *
Mr. Tayler. What children have you by her?
Mr. Hickman. Five children. * * *
Mr. Tayler. And for ten years you lived with two wives? * *
From 1890 to 1900?
Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir. * * *
Mr. Tayler. * * As you understand it, you are not lawfully wedded to your wife?
Mr. Hickman. No, sir. * *
Mr. Tayler. You and she made the journey to Mexico for the sole purpose of being married?
Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Did you go together?
Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. What was the official position of the man who married you?
Mr. Hickman. I can not say
   Mr. Tather, you?

Mr. Hickman. I can not say.

Mr. Tather. What were you married in? What kind of a place?

Mr. Hickman. It was in no place—that is, just a small company. I do not remember who the company were, except this man. We were out walking through the country—over the country—and we were married.
       ried.

Mr. Tayler. Who were the witnesses?

Mr. Hickman. I do not know the witnesses. They were all strangers to me.

Mr. Tayler. Was no certificate given to you of the fact of your marriage?

Mr. Hickman. No, sir.

Mr. Tayler. You have, therefore, no record, and no record, so far as you know, exists of the fact of your marriage with this young woman?
as you know, exists of the fact of your marriage with this young woman?

Mr. Hickman. That is all. * * *

The Chairman. I did not understand clearly where you said this ceremony was performed.

Mr. Hickman. I forget the name of the little village or place. We just went down and back. * * *

The Chairman. Whereabouts?

Mr. Hickman. As I stated, just out in the country. * * *

The Chairman. In the highway?

Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. How many were present in the highway when the ceremony took place?

Mr. Hickman. Perhaps half a dozen. * *

The Chairman. Did you go to this place where the ceremony was performed on foot or carriage?

Mr. Hickman. On foot.

The Chairman. How far was it from the town?

Mr. Hickman. Oh, perhaps about a mile. I don't remember now.

Mr. Tayler. Are you a daughter of Angus Cannon?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Very early in your life you were married to your cousin, Abraham Cannon, were you not? * * And since his death you have married Mr. Ellis?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir. * * * Mr. Tayler. When did he marry Lillian Hamlin?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir. * * * After June 12 and before July 2. * * 1896. * * * After June 12 and before July 2. * * 1896. * * * Mr. Tayler. Did you say anything to him in reply to his statement that he was going to marry her?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir. † 1 told him I did not think he could marry her.
* * He said he could marry her out of the State—out of the United States. * * * Mr. Tayler. * * What did Mr. Cannon say to you shortly before his death about his having married Miss Hamlin?
Mrs. Ellis. He told me he had married her, and asked my forgiveness. * * *
   Ness.
Senator Dubois. Have you ever heard it rumored that anybody else than Joseph F. Smith married them?
Mrs. Ellis. I thought he had married them until he was here last year, or at the last term of Congress.
Mr. TAYLER. Until he testified here in the committee?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
                                                                                                                             TESTIMONY OF MRS. MARGARET GEDDES.
      Mr. Tayler. When were you married?
Mrs. Geddes. I came here the 1st day of June, 1884, and was married the December following—the 4th day, 1884.
Mr. Tayler. Whom did you marry then?
Mrs. Geddes. William S. Geddes. * *
Mr. Tayler. Were you a plural wife?
Mrs. Geddes. Yes, sir. * * *
Mr. Tayler. Did you have children?
Mrs. Geddes. Yes, sir. * * * Four children. * *
Mr. Tayler. Do you know about what year you came back from Orezon?
    Oregon?
    Oregon?

Mrs. Geddes, It was the year my husband died, sir. That is thirteen years ago last August, and I came back thirteen years ago last June, I think. * * * My husband died in August, and my little baby was born the following January. * * * Mr. TAYLER. How many children have you now, Mrs. Geddes?

Mrs. Geddes? Mrs. Geddes: Four living children. * * * My oldest boy is dead, but the four living ones are aged, the one 17, the one 15, one 13, and one 5%.

Mr. TAYLER. Who is your second husband?

Mrs. Geddes. I have no second husband.

Mr. TAYLER. Who is the father of the youngest child?

Mrs. Geddes. I decline to answer that question. Mr. Tayler. Is his name Echols (Eccles)? Mrs. Geddes. No, sir. * * * Mrs. Tayler. Where was the child born? Mrs. Geddes. Salt Lake City.
                                                                                   TESTIMONY OF JOHN NICHOLSON.
Mr. Tayler. Mr. Nicholson, are you a polygamist?
Mr. Nicholson. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. How many wives have you?
Mr. Nicholson. I have two.
Mr. Tayler. Have you had children born to you since 1890? * *
By both wives?
Mr. Nicholson. Wait a moment. I have so many that I can not tell.
The Charman, I do not want to annoy you, but can you readily recall the number of children was have had?
 The Chairman. I do not want to annoy you, but can you readily recall the number of children you have had?

Mr. Nicholson. Fifteen.

The Chairman. How many of them by the plural wife, if you can
            Mr. Nicholson. Five; and ten by the other.
                                                                                   TESTIMONY OF JOSIAH HICKMAN.
Senator Dubois. Is it permissible for a Mormon, or was it permissible when you were married the second time, for a Mormon to enter into plural marriage without getting the consent of some one in authority in the church?

Mr. Hickman. No. sir. You mean in my second marriage?
Senator Dubois. Yes; or any second marriage.

Mr. Hickman. I do not think it could be done without authority. Senator Dubois. * * Who gave you your authority to enter into this marriage?

Mr. Hickman. Francis M. Lyman.
Senator Dubois. Was he an apostle at the time?

Mr. Hickman. Yes, sir.
                                                                                        TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM BUDGE.
         Mr. Tayler. What official position do you hold?
Mr. Budge. I am president of the Bear Lake stake.
Mr. Tayler. How many wives have you?
Mr. Budge. Three.
Mr. Budge. Three.
Mr. Tayler. How many children?
Mr. Budge. Twenty-five.
Mr. Tayler. How old is your youngest child?
Mr. Tayler. How old is your youngest child?
Mr. Tayler. How old is your youngest child?
Mr. Tayler. The mother of that child is your wife who was married of you in 1868? [Third wife.]
Mr. Budge. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. How many children have you had by her since 1890?
Mr. Budge. Three children.
Mr. Tayler. Where are your other wives?
Mr. Budge. Living also at Paris.
Mr. Tayler. You do not live with one of them to the exclusion of the thers?
Mr. Budge. No, sir.
                                                                             TESTIMONY OF JOHN HENRY SMITH.
            Mr. TAYLER. When did you become an apostle?
Mr. SMITH. In 1880, I think, if my memory serves me.
Mr. TAYLER. How many wives have you?
Mr. SMITH. Two.
Mr. TAYLER. And you have had children born since the manifesto by your plural wife?
Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. How many?
Mr. SMITH. I couldn't say; but there are several of them.
The CHAIRMAN. Could you, by reflection, tell the committee about how many of the seven were born since 1890?
Mr. SMITH. I should think there were four of them.
Mr. TAYLER. Were you one of the signers of the application for amnesty?
Mr. SMITH. You sir.
Mr. Tayler. Were you one of the signers of the application for annesty?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir. * * *

Mr. Tayler. Do you remember the interpretation put upon it by Wilford Woodruff and the other leaders of the church? * * * And the testimony of Joseph F. Smith respecting the meaning of the manifesto? * * Its appliction as well to polygamous cohabitation as to entering into new polygamous relation? * * * You subscribe to their view of it, do you?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir. * *

Mr. Tayler. You propose to continue the practice that you then started, upon the theory that there is a higher obligation upon you than the obligation to obey the law?

Mr. Smith. Yes; I must suffer the consequences, if my countrymen see fit to punish me. * * *

Mr. Tayler. That relation that you contracted, and others like you, prior to the manifesto; to your several wives, was a relation which you contracted with the approval of God?

Mr. Smith. That is it.

Mr. Tayler. And that no law of the land can dissolve that?

Mr. Smith. No, sir.

Mr. Smith. No, sir.

I will rend a brief extract from the testimony of Mr. Smoot.
            I will read a brief extract from the testimony of Mr. Smoot showing his connection with this organization and his attitude toward it:
  The CHAIRMAN. In your church economy is there any method by which the president can be deposed?

Senator SMOOT. Yes; there is.

The CHAIRMAN. What?
   Senator SMOOT. If he commits any unchristian-like act or in any way, shape, or form does anything that would unfit him for that place, he can be tried just the same as any member of the church.
```

The CHAIRMAN. And if found guilty?
Senator SMOOT. And if found guilty he can be removed from the church.
The CHAIRMAN. And from his presidency?
Senator SMOOT. And from his presidency.
The CHAIRMAN. You heard the testimony here, I believe, of Joseph F.
Smith?
Senator SMOOT. I did

The CHAIRMAN. You heard the testimony here, I believe, of Joseph F. Smith?

Senator SMOOT. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. In which he testified that he was living in defiance of the law of the land?

Senator SMOOT. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you also hear him state that he was living contrary to the divine law?

Senator SMOOT. I heard him testify, and make his qualifications.

The CHAIRMAN. That he is living in defiance of the divine command. Has the church proceeded against him for the violation of these laws? Senator SMOOT. They have not.

The CHAIRMAN. No steps have been taken to try him for the offense of polygamous cohabitation?

Senator SMOOT. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood you to say this morning that it is the province of the apostles to counsel and advise the president?

Senator SMOOT. When asked by him.

The CHAIRMAN. Only when requested?

Senator SMOOT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not, then, at liberty to advise him unless requested?

The CHAIRMAN. You are not, then, at liberty to advise him unless requested?

Senator SMOOT. I do not think he would object to it at all if I did. The CHAIRMAN. Are you at liberty to advise him unless requested? Senator SMOOT. I do not think President Smith would object if I did. I do not know that I have any special right to do it, but I do not think he would object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think my question was very plain. You have the right to advise him, even if he does not request it?

Senator SMOOT. That is a question which it is hard to answer yes or no, and I do not want to—

The CHAIRMAN. After you heard President Smith testify here that he was living in violation of the laws of the State and of the law of God did you see him in the committee room and elsewhere?

Senator SMOOT. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. How long was he here?

Senator SMOOT. Here in Washington, do you mean?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. I am not particular about it—two or three days?

Senator SMOOT. West of three days.

The CHAIRMAN. You saw him frequently?

Senator SMOOT. Not frequently. I saw him, though.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make any protest to him about his manner of living?

Senator SMOOT. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. You have visited Utah since?

Senator SMOOT. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you protested against his living in polygamous cohabitation?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you in any way sought to bring him to trial for those offenses?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you in embed to?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. How you remember how many children he said had been born to him since 1890?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you intend to?

Senator SMOOT. I think he said eleven.

The CHAIRMAN. And by all of his five wives?

Senator SMOOT. That I am not positive of.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, with the full knowledge of these facts, testified to by him, you sustained him in October last?

Senator SMOOT. That i am not positive of.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you indeated to him directly or indirectly that Church?

Senator Smoot. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. And you intend to retain your relationship and your apostolic position and sustain the president in his crimes?

Mr. Worthington. I object to that—that he intends to sustain the president in his crimes.

The CHAIRMAN. I will modify the question. I will ask the witness whether he intended to sustain Mr. Smith in the commission of this

The CHAIRMAN. I will modify the question. I will ask the witness whether he intended to sustain Mr. Smith in the commission of this Senator SMOOT. I do not sustain any man in the commission of crime.

The CHAIRMAN, You sustained him in living in polygamous cohabitation?

The CHAIRMAN, fou sustained him in living in polygamous consultation?

Senator Smoot. I have not said that.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not sustain him in October last?

Senator Smoot. I sustained him as president of the church.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have made no protest to him personally?

Senator Smoot. It is not my place as an officer of the law nor within my place as a citizen of Provo. That is where I live. It is not my place to make any complaint to the officers of the law against President Joseph F. Smith.

The CHAIRMAN. Against the head of the church?

Senator Smoot. Against Joseph F. Smith, or John Henry Smith; I do not care whether he is the head of the church or a man living there.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you think that your relation as an apostle does not impose upon you any duty to make complaint against the head of the church for any offense?

Senator Smoot. I do not think it would be my duty.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you said before the October conference there

The CHAIRMAN. I think you said before the October conference there was a meeting of the officials of the church. Did I understand you correctly—that the president and apostles had a meeting and that there was some discussion about some matters?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Prior to the 1904 conference, you mean?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes; some preliminary meeting of the officials.

Senator SMOOT. Why, we had meetings right along, Mr. Chairman. I can not call to mind what you have reference to.

The CHAIRMAN. I had reference to your testimony in chief in which you said there was a meeting of the president and the apostles a few

The CHAIRMAN. I had reference to your testimony in chief in which you said there was a meeting of the president and the apostles a few days before the conference.

Senator SMOOT. At the time Mr. Penrose was nominated? The CHAIRMAN. Possibly.

Senator SMOOT. Yes; I remember it.

The CHAIRMAN. What I want to inquire about is whether at that time you made known to Mr. Smith and those present your surprise to learn that the president was living in polygamous cohabitation? Senator SMOOT. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not say anything to him about it? Was anything said about it by anyone?

Senator SMOOT. Not that I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Penrose was proposed, as I understood you to say, at that meeting—

Senator SMOOT. By the president of the church.

The CHAIRMAN. To fill the vacancy in the apostolate? Senator SMOOT. He was a polygamist at that time? Senator SMOOT. He was a polygamist. He had been married before the manifesto.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I understand.

Then Mr. SMOOT volunteered this statement:

Then Mr. Smoot volunteered this statement:

But, of course, as I said, you know, Senator, at that time I did not know it.

Mr. Smoot had sat in the committee room and heard Smith testify that Penrose was a polygamist, but in order that the president of the church might have no misunderstanding of his attitude or suppose that he did not approve of what the president himself was doing, he volunteered this statement:

But it would not have made any difference to me, as I said before.

The Chairman. That is as I understand; but at the time you did not know he was a polygamist?

Senator Smoot. I knew he had been a polygamist, and I knew that one of his wives died. I never knew anything about his family, and I thought he had had two wives and, one dying, he only had the one; but it proved that he had, before the manifesto, three wives instead of two.

I thought he had had two wives and, one dying, he only had the one; but it proved that he had, before the manifesto, three wives instead of two.

The Chairman. Do you know what his general reputation was at that time in that regard?

Senator Smoot. I never heard it mentioned.
The Chairman. It never came to your knowledge what his reputation was in that particular?

Senator Smoot. I never heard it mentioned, Mr. Chairman.
The Chairman. I understood you to say you would have voted for him had you known him to be a polygamist.

Senator Smoot. Under the circumstances, that he was married before the manifesto.

The Chairman. Then the fact, if it were true, that he was living in polygamous cohabitation would have made no difference with your vote? Senator Smoot. Well, I knew nothing as to that, of course.
The Chairman. Suppose it to be true that he was, and you had known he was, living in polygamous cohabitation since the manifesto; you would have still supported him?

Senator Smoot. In a church position.
The Chairman. I beg your pardon.
Senator Smoot. In a church position.
The Chairman. Well, this was a church position.
Senator Smoot. This was a church position.
The Chairman. So that would not have deterred you from voting for him?
Senator Smoot. I hardly think so.

him?

The Chairman. So that would not have deterred you from voting for him?

Senator Smoot. I hardly think so.
Mr. Tayler. Senator, while you were an apostle, Joseph F. Smith was made president?
Senator Smoot. He was.
Mr. Tayler. You voted for him?
Senator Smoot. I did.
Senator Overman. Did you vote to sustain him at the October conference, after he had given his testimony here?
Senator Smoot. I did.
Mr. Tayler. And you have voted to sustain him ever since then?
Senator Smoot. Whenever I have been there, on the ground that I stated yesterday.
Mr. Tayler. That there was no reason, according to your view, why a man should not be elevated to a church office, who was married to plural wives, and continued in that habit or relation?
Senator Smoot. I forget whether I said continued in their relation, but I suppose it would be the same.
Mr. Tayler. The same thing?
Senator Smoot. Yes.

Senator Smoot. Yes.

Mr. Tayler. When was it that your attention was first called to the claim or charge or rumor that President Benjamin Cluff, of Brigham Young University, had married another and a plural wife since the manifesto?

Senator Smoot. In 1902, I think.

Mr. Tayler. You were then a trustee of the institution?

Senator Smoot. I was.

Mr. Tayler. And you were a member of what committee?

Senator Smoot. I was a member of the executive committee.

Mr. Tayler. And you were also at that time an apostle?

Senator Smoot. Yes; I was.

Mr. Tayler. What steps did you take to find out if that was true?

Senator Smoot. Mr. Knight told me that he was going to inquire about it, and that he did inquire of Mr. Cluff about it, and I do not know that I took any particular steps, Mr. Tayler, other than what was related here yesterday at the meeting.

Mr. Tayler. You said that Mr. Cluff gave a reply to Mr. Knight that you interpreted as being evasive?

Senator Smoot. I so considered it.

Mr. Tayler. Did you learn who was the reputed new wife?

Senator Smoot. I beard from Mr. Knight that it was the daughter of George Reynolds.

* * * Did Knight make a report to you as to what he found to be the facts?

Senator Smoot. He told me, Mr. Chairman, that he had spoken to Mr. Cluff about it, and that Mr. Cluff gave what he considered an evasive answer, and that he thought there must be some truth in it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you follow it up after that to ascertain?
Senator Smoot. I reported here that that was the beginning, I think, of the removal of Mr. Cluff, or the change of Mr. Cluff as president of the faculty of Brigham Young University.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make further inquiry?
Senator Smoot. I said no. I did not.
Mr. TAYLEE. He remained president for a year or two after that?
Senator Smoot. A year, I think; a little over.
Mr. TAYLEE. Then he was succeeded by Brimhall.
Senator Smoot. George H. Brimhall.
Mr. TAYLEE. He also was a polygamist, living with his plural wife? Senator Smoot. Yes. He had two wives, as I stated yesterday.
Mr. TAYLEE. He has now, has he not?
Senator Smoot. Yes. * * * * Mr. TAYLEE. But if you had been there, I understood you to say, you would have voted for him?
Senator Smoot. I think I would. * * *
Mr. TAYLEE. But if you had been there, I understood you to say, you would have voted for him?
Senator Smoot. I think I would. * * *
Mr. TAYLEE. And the rule which you laid down as controlling your conduct in such a case, for instance, as Apostle Penrose's election, would apply to the case of a man who was to be elected president of a church university?
Senator Smoot. I think the same rule might apply. Of course the conditions may be different.
Mr. TAYLEE. I mean, other things being the same, that is to say, you would not vote for George Brimhall for a civil political position, but you would vote for him for president of the Brigham Young University?
Senator Smoot. If it was a Federal office. I would not vote for Mr. Brimhall. * * But if it were a local office there that he was running for, perhaps I would. * * *
Mr. TAYLEE. Then, you state that you would be more likely to apply the rule of noninterference on account of a man's polygamous living in a case where he was to be chosen for a State office or an office in the State than if it was a Federal position that was to be filled?
Senator Smoot. I think I could say that with truth, Mr. Tayler.
Mr. Taylee. Now, why? * The law which George to do with it?

Senator Smoot. I do not think that George Brimhall is holding out a wife there in a flaunting manner. I do not think very many people know that he has more than one.

Mr. Tayler. Is he not violating the law?
Senator Smoot. Technically, yes.

Mr. Tayler. Technically? Is he having children by his plural wife?
Senator Smoot. Yes; he is. * * *
The Chairman. You say it is a technical violation of the law?
Senator Smoot. I think, Mr. Chairman, I could even say it is a violation of the spirit of the law.

The Chairman. Is it not only a violation of the spirit of the law, but of the letter of the law?
Senator Smoot. And the letter of the law.

Citations from the testimony might be confinued almost indefi-

Citations from the testimony might be continued almost indefinitely showing the continued belief in polygamy and the widespread practice of polygamous cohabitation throughout Utah and in contiguous States and Territories.

But it is said polygamy is dying out. Who says this and by what evidence is such declaration supported? The President of the United States, who never moves by indirection or strikes an aimless blow, is evidently not in accord with the opinion that polygamy is dying out. Let me read from his message delivered to this body less than ninety days ago. He said:

to this body less than ninety days ago. He said:

I am well aware of how difficult it is to pass a constitutional amendment. Nevertheless, in my judgment, the whole question of marriage and divorce should be relegated to the authority of the National Congress. At present the wide differences in the laws of the different States on this subject result in scandals and abuses; and surely there is nothing so vitally essential to the welfare of the nation, nothing around which the nation should so bend itself to throw every safeguard, as the home life of the average citizen. The change would be good from every standpoint.

In particular it would be good because it would confer on the Congress the power at once to deal radically and efficiently with polygamy, and this should be done whether or not marriage and divorce are dealt with. It is neither safe nor proper to leave the question of polygamy to be dealt with by the several States. Power to deal with it should be conferred on the National Government.

When home ties are loosened; when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed, and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living then evil days for the Commonwealth are at hand.

It is not true that polygamy has ceased, either in Utah or

It is not true that polygamy has ceased, either in Utah or elsewhere in the adjacent States and Territories. Nor is its teaching abandoned.

We have had read to us from the Book of Doctrines and Covenants a portion of the articles of faith of this cult, but a very important part of the creed was omitted. I supply it:

61. And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin and desires to espouse another and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then he is justified—he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to no one else.

62. And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong to him and they are given unto him; therefore is he justified.

It is said that this article of faith is suspended, but it is, nevertheless, retained in the Book of Doctrines and Covenants, and published throughout the world, while the manifesto suspending it has never found its way into this compilation. The poison is retained, but the antidote is withheld. Suspended, but not repudiated, for every witness before the committee, from Joseph Smith to the humblest follower of this seer and prophet, including Mr. Smoot himself, declare continued belief in the principle of polygamy as much to-day as they ever did, and it is a remarkable fact that in the Senator's speech of yesterday he did not repudiate that article of faith. It is only suspended for the time being.

But whatever may be said regarding polygamy, polygamous cohabitation is rampant in Utah, and in many of the adjoining States and Territories, and it is this which constitutes the head and front of the offending.

The Attorney-General reported December 29, 1905:

The Attorney-General reported December 29, 1905:

The Department was advised by telegram, on December 27, 1905, that the prosecutions in Arizona have resulted in sixteen convictions and three acquittals under the Edmunds Act. Twelve convictions out of the sixteen were for unlawful cohabitation.

The district attorney advised the Department, on December 26, 1905, by telegram, that during the year 1905 fifteen persons have been convicted under the Edmunds Act and twelve cases dismissed.

It will therefore be observed that the investigation conducted by the Department in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, since the matter was first called to the attention of the Department by you, has resulted in thirty-one convictions in these two Territories, in the majority of the cases upon the charge of unlawful cohabitation.

Very respectfully,

William H. Moony.

WILLIAM H. MOODY, Attorney-General.

But why should not polygamous cohabitation continue and steadily increase under the continued and notorious practice and potent example of the head of the organization, who biasphemously proclaims himself "seer, prophet, saint, revelator, and mouthpiece of God?"

I hold in my hand an indictment against this lecherous head of the church whom the Senator from Utah but recently eulogized. Let me read it. It is a certified copy, attested October 3, 1906:

STATE OF UTAH, County of Salt Lake, ss:

State of Utah, County of Salt Lake, ss:

In the city court of Salt Lake City, before J. J. Whitaker, judge. The State of Utah, complainant, v. Joseph F. Smith, defendant.

On this 1st day of October, A. D. 1906, before J. J. Whitaker, judge of the city court within and for Salt Lake City, Salt Lake County, State of Utah, personally appeared Axel Steele, who, on being duly sworn by me, on his oath did say that Joseph F. Smith, on the 2d day of December, 1903, and at divers times thereafter and continuously thereafter down to and including the 1st day of October, 1906, at Salt Lake City. Salt Lake County, State of Utah, did commit the crime of unlawful cohabitation as follows, to wit: That the said Joseph Smith, being then and there a male person, did then and there unlawfully and wilifully live and cohabit with more than one woman, to wit, Julina L. Smith, Sarah E. Smith, Edna L. Smith, Alice K. Smith, and Mart T. Smith, in the habit and repute of marriage, contrary to the provisions of the statute of the State aforesaid, in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the State of Utah.

AXEL STEELE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the day and year first above written.

J. J. WHITAKER, Judge.

This "prophet and seer" but ninety days ago was arraigned in a criminal court and convicted for unlawful cohabitation. I need not read the information, the judgment of the court will suffice:

In the third judicial district court in and for Salt Lake County, State of Utah. State of Utah v. Joseph F. Smith. Information charging unlawful cohabitation.

unlawful cohabitation.

F. C. Loofbourow, district attorney, the defendant, and his attorney, F. S. Richards, being now present and ready, the defendant is duly arraigned at the bar in open court and, especially waiving time therefor, now enters his plea of guilty to the crime of unlawful cohabitation as charged in the information on file herein; and said defendant, especially waiving time for the passing of sentence and being now before me, Morris L. Ritchie, judge, and ready, the judgment and sentence of this court is that you, Joseph F. Smith, pay a fine of $300, or in default thereof be confined in the county jail one day for each dollar thereof remaining unpaid.

And it is further ordered that you, C. Frank Emery, sheriff of Salt Lake County, State of Utah, be, and you are hereby, commanded to take the said Joseph F. Smith and confine him in the said county jail in accordance with the above sentence and commitment.

Dated Thursday, November 23, 1906.

This "seer and prophet," this exemplar of an alleged religious faith, is brought into a criminal court, and pleads guilty to faith, is brought into a criminal court, and pleads guilty to unlawful cohabitation with five women, and the court imposes upon him a fine of $300, and he returns to his wallowing.

But we are assured that polygamous cohabitation, if permitted to run its course, will ultimately die out. Time and time again the nation has been lulled into repose and fancied security by this specious cry.

But when may the country expect its demise? The comforting assurance is given us that when this crime has run its course, and the last victim of this lustful oligarchy shall have found safety and repose within the portals of the grave, then we may expect to see the end of this abomination. In the mean-time the crime must be permitted to continue, and with silent and insidious step pursue its course of pollution of the American home. Mr. President, it ought to stop now-this day and hour—and the National Government, in view of what the President has said, at no distant day will, I trust, lay its hand upon this unholy thing and compel its devotees to obey the law and stop filling the land with their illegitimate offspring.

But we are told that this is a war against a religious faith and that if Mr. Smoot is expelled then the presiding authorities of every church of whatever faith, Jew or Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, may be denied a seat in this national council cham-ber. I deny it. It is not a war on a church, but it is a protest against the admission into the Senate of the representative of an organization confessedly criminal. Churches of this country, Jew or Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, alike guard and protect the purity of the home as the altar of their faith, I protest against this effort to drag the Christian churches of the land down to the low level of this abomination.

[Applause in the galleries.]
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not allowed under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS: But it is said that Senator Smoot from his youth up has set his face and lifted up his voice against polygamy.

The testimony in the case will be searched in vain for one act of Mr. Smoot or one word from him in opposition to the practice of polygamy or polygamous cohabitation on the part of his associates, who, with him, give the law to the church. He testified in the investigation that after knowing that the head of the church was living in defiance of the laws of God and the State he did not even advise a different course of conduct, although confessedly a part of his duty as an apostle to act as an adviser of the erring official.

And while it has been the practice as well as the duty of Mr. Smoot to preach to the people, he has never on any single occasion uttered one word against polygamy or polygamous cohabitation. His own testimony on that point is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you, Senator, to state that you do not

The Chairman. I understand you, Senator, to state that you do not teach polygamy?
Senator Smoot. I do not.
The Chairman, Or advise it? You teach and preach sometimes?
Senator Smoot. I do.
The Chairman Do you preach against polygamy?
Senator Smoot. I never have in a public gathering of people.
The Chairman, Why do you not?
Senator Smoot. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know why I should.
The Chairman, You do not know why you should?
Senator Smoot. Or why I should not. It is not a tenet now of the faith and—that is, what I mean to say is, it has been suspended, and I think it would not be proper for me to bring it up, because it is not preached for or against.
The Chairman, So, while it is literally true that you do not teach or preach polygamy, you have not taught or preached against it?

preached for or against.

The CHAIRMAN SO, while it is literally true that you do not teach or preach polygamy, you have not taught or preached against it?

Senator SMOOT. No. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN Senator, in your teaching and preaching, have you at any time denounced polygamous cohabitation?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN And do I understand you to say you do not repudiate that practice and preach against it publicly?

Senator SMOOT. I have not.

On the other hand, there are numerous acts of Mr. Smoot as an apostle encouraging polygamy as well as polygamous cohabi-While the contracting of plural marriages by his associates in the apostolate and others since the manifesto has been a matter of so common notoriety that Mr. Smoot could not have been ignorant of the truth, he, by his silence, shielded those who were guilty of this crime until the facts had been revealed by this investigation. As one of the trustees of the Brigham Young Academy it was his duty to at least inquire concerning the truth of assertions that Benjamin Cluff, jr., had taken a plural wife since the manifesto, but he made no effort in that As trustee of the same institution he made no obdirection. jection to the election of George H. Brimhall, a polygamist, as president of the academy after the retirement of Benjamin Cluff, jr. Nor did he object to the appointment of Joseph F. Tanner as superintendent of the Mormon Sunday schools of the world when Tanner was obliged to step down and out of his official position in the agricultural college because of the fact that he was a polygamist and had taken a plural wife since the manifesto and it was feared that on this account the support given by the United States Government to the college would be withdrawn. He assisted in the election of Joseph F. Smith to the presidency of the church, at the time a well-known polygamist, and has since then twice every year voted to sustain him, He assisted in the selection of Heber J. Grant, a notorious polygamist, as president of a most important mission. He voted for the election of Charles W. Penrose, a polygamist, as an apostle, although there were any number of high officials in the church who were in every way worthy of consideration, but who were not polygamists and had clean hands and clean con-

Other instances might be cited in which Mr. Smoot has favored polygamy, but I challenge Senators to find one word in his testimony to the effect that he ever preached against polygamous cohabitation or has raised his voice or has set his face

The conclusion of the whole matter is that in not a single case has Mr. Smoot done one act or spoken one word in opposition to polygamy or polygamous cohabitation; but nearly every personal or official act of his, as brought to light by the testimony, has been in encouragement of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. And all this apart from and in addition to the fact of his joining and associating with his fellow-members of the hierarchy, whose support and encouragement of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation is open and notorious. It is Mr. connection with this organization which makes him responsible for its acts.

will insert here, with the permission of the Senate, the opinion of the courts of this country that this organization or organizations of this character are criminal organizations. refer to the case of Davis v. Beeson, decided by the Supreme Court in 1889. The revised statutes of the State of Idaho provided that-

No person who is a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members, devotees, or any other person to commit the crime of bigamy, polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a rite or ceremony of such order, organization, association, or otherwise, is permitted to vote at any election, or to hold any position or office of honor, trust, or profit within this Territory.

The Supreme Court upheld this provision as constitutional. It will be observed that this act disfranchises persons, not for the commission of the crime of polygamy, but upon the ground that they belong to an organization which "teaches, counsels, and encourages others to commit the crime of polygamy.

In the case of Wooley v. Watkins, Second Idaho Reports, the court say:

Orders, organizations, and associations, by whatever name they may be called, which teach, advise, counsel, or encourage the practice or commission of acts forbidden by law are criminal organizations. To become and continue to be members of such organizations or associations are such overt acts of recognition and participation as make them particeps criminis and as guilty in contemplation of criminal law as though they actually engaged in furthering their unlawful objects and purposes.

It is established beyond all controversy that a majority of the ruling authorities of the Utah Mormon Church are living in open polygamy, and thereby encouraging its practice, and many of them have taken plural wives since the manifesto, and that the Senator, as a member of such organization, is cognizant of these crimes and indifferent to their perpetration.

What more is needed? Is the Senate to say it will not exclude Mr. Smoot because he has not himself taken a plural wife? Will it decide that he can countenance and encourage the commission of crimes, consort with and sustain criminals, and as an apostle, escape all responsibility therefor? When the president of this organization testified, as he did, that he had five wives and that he would continue to cohabit with them until his death, I have always been amazed that the Senator did not rise in his place and denounce him as an impostor and a violator of the law, and then and there sever his connection with such an unholy alliance.

Mr. President, in face of this testimony it may be a little difficult for the public to understand why it is that we close the gates of Castle Garden with one hand against incoming polygamists and with the other open wide the doors of the Senate to the admission of an apostle who stands for an organization which believes in polygamy and upholds polygamous cohabitation.

Some criticism has been passed upon the women of this country because they have ventured to exercise the right of petition guaranteed to every American citizen, of whatever sex, in which they have implored the Senate to realize the danger of admitting to its membership an apostle of this oligarchy, and to guard, by every constitutional means against its encroachment.

It is not true that they have petitioned that Mr. Smoor shall be expelled because he is a polygamist. They have petitioned that he be expelled or rejected because he is the representative of an organization which continues, in defiance of all law, human and divine, to plot against the welfare of society and the sanctity of the home.

I know the members of this Senate too well to be persuaded that such appeals will swerve any Senator from his just conception of duty, but such petitions may be serviceable in directing attention to the importance of the higher issue and graver question and restrain us from being influenced by any personal or political consideration. That the women of the whole country should feel a keen interest in this matter is but natural, for they stand at the portals of every home, its guardian and defender, and we will do well to remember in our places of pride and power that

There is yet an auguster thing, Veiled though it be, than Parliament or King.

If Senator Smoot, under all these circumstances, with his confessed connection with this criminal organization, is permitted to retain his membership in this body, then when he attends the next conference of his associates he can not only raise his hand and voice to sustain Joseph F. Smith and his confrères in crime, but he can convey to them the comforting assurance that the Senate of the United States has, by recorded vote, approved and sustained the promoters and defenders of this un-American, un-Christian, and unholy order. Let us hope that no such humiliation will come to the Republic.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish, in a few words, to give my position in this matter. I have arrived at a conclusion with some difficulty. I would be glad if my conscience and my judgment would permit me to vote for the retention of Mr. Smoot as a member of this body. I have a high regard for Mr. Smoot personally and, besides, personal interest would prompt me to vote for his retention. The Mormon Church is a strong political factor in a portion of Nevada, and the man who antagonizes that church takes his political life in his hands. But my conscience and judgment will not permit me so to vote. I do not believe that under the Constitution Mr. Smoot can be excluded upon the facts in this case by a majority vote. I believe that a two-thirds vote is required, and I shall so act.

Mr. President, one of the central ideas of our Government is the separation of church and state. That is true of our National Government. That is true of our State governments. The union between church and state is accomplished when the state regulates and controls the church in spiritual matters. The union of church and state is as thoroughly accomplished when the church regulates and controls the state in temporal matters.

The charge which is made against the Mormon Church, leaving entirely out of consideration the question of its sanction of polygamy and polygamous practices, is that from its very organization under Brigham Young up to the present time it has sought to control and does control the State of Utah in temporal matters. That church is not merely a religious organiza-It has in view not only the maintenance of spiritual belief, but the control of its members in temporal matters-in matters of business, of industry, of commerce, of social life, and of political action. It acts as a unit in these matters, and its priests control its policies. It fills out completely the definition of hierarchy—a form of government administered by the priesthood, a sacred body of rulers. Unlike any other church in the country, it has a oneness and completeness of organization in matters temporal as well as spiritual, created by the genius of Brigham Young. Mr. Smoot is one of the high priests of this hierarchy, and the question is whether it is consistent with our institutions that this body of sacred rulers so potent in Utah shall be represented in the Senate by one of its members.

I shall vote for the exclusion of Mr. Smoot, not because of any personal unfitness for the position which he holds, but because he is a high priest in a religious organization which believes in the union of church and state and which seeks to control the action of the state in temporal matters.

But not content with dominion in Utah, this church is reaching out for the control of other States adjoining. To-day it holds the balance of power in the State of Idaho. that it holds the balance of power in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. I can not permit a statement of that kind to go without expressing my dissent from it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My time is short, and I decline to yield. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada declines to vield.

Mr. WARREN. I dissent from that statement and assert that the Mormon Church does not hold the balance of power in Wyoming, and there is no evidence that it seeks it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Mormon Church may soon hold the balance of power in the State of Nevada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada

yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I decline to yield, as I have only a moment in which to conclude. The Mormon Church may hold the balance of power in the State of Colorado. Its organization is complete and effective in the Territories of Arizona and New It is increasing in Mexico, which may become sovereign States. numbers and strength daily, not only by the birth of those born

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President— Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent that I may go on for two minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. KEAN. I call for the regular order.

VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the hour for debate has closed.

Mr. HOPKINS. I offer the following amendment to the resolution now pending before the Senate, and on the vote upon the adoption or rejection of the amendment I ask for the year and

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. After the word "Resolved," in line 1, insert

"(two-thirds of the Senators present concurring the words therein);" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein). That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois demands the yeas and nays on the question, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will state his question of order.

Mr. CARMACK. Would it be in order for me to offer the amendment I have proposed as a substitute for the original reso-Intion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not until after amendments have been considered to perfect the original resolution. The first business in order is to perfect the resolution reported by the Senator from Michigan. The Senator from Illinois demands the yeas and nays upon his amendment to the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask that the amendment be again read. The Secretary again read Mr. Hopkins's amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreement to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this general question, as well as all questions, I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. I am instructed by him to state that if he were present he would vote against the amendment suggested by the Senator from Illinois, and also in favor of the resolution. Being paired with him, I withhold my

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). On this question, as on all phases of the question, I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson]. If he were present he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea" on the pending question.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair, covering all questions, with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McEnery]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. Platt] and vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Foster]. Senator before leaving discussed with me this question and the phases that might arise, and it was his agreement that I should wote my own convictions upon this matter. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. Mallory's name was called).

My colleague [Mr. MALLORY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor]. If my colleague were present, he would vote to expel REED SMOOT, but he would not vote to remove him from the Senate by a majority vote. He requests me to make this statement.

Mr. DANIEL (when Mr. Martin's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom].

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. However, under the statement made by his colleague, that if he were present he would vote "yea" upon this question, I will vote. I vote "yea." I will announce now, in advance, that on the main question I will recognize my pair and withhold my vote. Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. RAYNER (when Mr. Whyte's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Whyte] is unavoidably detained. He is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. If my colleague were present and not paired, he would vote against the present amendment and in favor of the original resolution unseating the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is detained from the Chamber by serious sickness.

Mr. KEAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DRYDEN] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER ].

The result was announced—yeas 49, navs 22, as follows:

So Mr. Hopkins's amendment was agreed to. Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I offer the substitute which send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT, a Senator from Utah, be expelled from the Senate of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Car-

Mr. DUBOIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Moroan]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOPKINS (when Mr. Cullom's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Cullom] is unavoidably detained from the Senate to-day. He is paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McEnery], as before, and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley].

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. Morgan's name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] is confined to his home, being unwell. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."
Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I again

So Mr. Carmack's amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the resolu-tion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] as amended the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]

Mr. BURROWS. Let the resolution as amended be stated,

Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

On that I call for the yeas and nays. Mr. BACON.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I repeat that upon this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I again an-

Mr. HALE. We are going on with appropriation bills.
Mr. BACON. With the agricultural appropriation bill?
Mr. HALE. Yes.
Mr. BACON. I simply want to know if the Senator from Maine is willing that the evening session shall be limited to that?

Mr. HALE. No; because we may get through with that and take up another appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. I only wanted to know what is proposed by the order

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, which I reported with amendments on the 14th instant. Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate, by unanimous consent, to take up the bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him?

Mr. CULBERSON. I might as well object to the present consideration of the bill now as later.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—
Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that there are several committee amendments, to which I think there will be no objection, and I ask that they be taken up and disposed of before section 3 is reached.

Mr. NELSON. Before section 3 is reached?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, line 13, to strike out "five" and insert "ten" so as to make the section read:

That section 6 of an act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as proved March 14, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $20, and to issue gold certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $10, and the coin so deposited shall be retained in the Treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any national banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve: Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin and bullion held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $100,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended: And provided further, That whenever and so long as the aggregate amount of United States notes and silver certificates in the general fund of the Treasury shall exceed $60,000,000 the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, suspend the issue of the certificates herein provided for: And provided further, That of the amount of such outstanding certificates one-fourth at least shall be in denomination of $50 or less: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue such certificates in denominations of $10,000, payable to order. And section 5193 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 and to insert

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 2. That whenever and so long as the outstanding silver certificates of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5, issued under the provisions of section 7 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, shall be, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, insufficient to meet the public demand therefor, he is hereby authorized to issue United States notes of the denominations of $1, $2, and $5, and upon the issue of United States notes of such denominations an equal amount of United States notes of higher denominations shall be retired and canceled: Provided, however, That the aggregate amount of United States notes at any time outstanding shall remain as at present fixed by law: And provided further. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting the right of any national bank to issue one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5, as now provided by law.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to have the Senator from Rhode Island tell the Senate something about what this bill means. As it has been read hurriedly, it is impossible to understand it. I should like to know, also, if it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Finance.

Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is. This section provides for the issue of one, two, and five dollar United States notes whenever the supply of silver certificates of those denominations is insufficient to meet the public demand. The act of 1900, known as the "gold-standard act," prohibited the issue of all notes of the denomination of ones and twos, except silver certificates. The supply of silver certificates of ones and twos is not equal to the demand, and there is a large and insistent public demand for notes of these denominations, which can not be supplied at the present time by the issue of silver certificates.

This bill proposes that whenever and so long as the supply of these denominations of silver certificates is insufficient the Secretary of the Treasury may issue ones, twos, and fives of United States notes, and United States notes of larger denominations to an equal amount are to be retired. The total amount of United States notes outstanding is to remain as now fixed by law

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is the effect of it to reduce the amount of silver or silver certificates now in circulation?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not to the extent of one dollar.

Mr. BERRY. The Treasury has been in the habit, has it not, of purchasing silver for minor coins? Does it stop that?

Mr. ALDRICH. For subsidiary coins, no. This does not affect that question at all. It simply provides for a supply of one and two dollar notes to answer the public demands.

Does it increase the amount of the currency? Mr. BERRY. Mr. ALDRICH. It does not increase or diminish the amount of currency. It merely changes the denominations of notes to meet a public demand.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the purpose of making this mange? As I understand, the law provides that United States notes shall be issued in denominations of not less than $5. Is that the case?

Mr. ALDRICH. Ten dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not less than $10. And the purpose of the bill is to permit United States notes to be issued in denominations of $5 and less?

Mr. ALDRICH. The present law permits the issue of ones and twos in silver certificates only; the purpose of this provision being to keep out as large an amount of silver certificates in the small notes as possible. It is impossible for the Secretary at the present time to meet the demands for ones and twos by the further issue of silver certificates. The total amount of silver certificates now outstanding is $476,000,000, of which $450,000,000 is in denominations of ones, twos, and fives. parties holding the larger certificates do not present them to the Treasury for redemption or exchange and, therefore, there is no source from which the Secretary of the Treasury can provide a further issue of ones and twos.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator who are the minority members of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. ALDRICH. The minority members are the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel], the Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey], the Senator from Missis sippi [Mr. Money], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Talia-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Florida agree to this measure?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Florida were present when the bill was considered and consented to its provisions.

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask the Senator what changes were made in regard to making national banking associations depositories?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is provided for in the third section, which has not yet been reached. The only change made in that section from existing law is to provide that customs receipts may be deposited in banks the same as internal-revenue receipts are, the only change being to strike out the words "except customs receipts," which are contained in the present law. That section is not at present under consideration.

Mr. CLAY. That is on page 6.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; it is the third section.
Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that I have an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the third section of the bill, which I shall offer, for the purpose of requiring the banks to pay some interest on the deposits.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator is correct, for it strikes me that in most of the States—in a great many States, I know—on State deposits interest is paid.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island has explained that this is simply a provision which does not change in any respect the now existing law on the subject of silver currency. Neither does it affect in the provision just being discussed the greenback currency, except to allow it to be broken into smaller notes.

Mr. HALE. That is it exactly.

Mr. DANIEL. There has been great demand all over this country for more currency of the smaller denominations. There were four ways in which it was suggested it might be accomplished. One was by allowing the gold certificates to be broken up into smaller particles. But gold was getting on well and flowing into the country under the present arrangement, and in breaking it up into such smaller particles it might be brought in conflict with the arrangements made to sustain the value of silver and greenbacks and national-bank currency, and it was thought best to let it stand as it is.

Another suggestion considered was with respect to breaking up national-bank notes and requiring the national banks to issue them in smaller denominations. This was objected to by the banks as entailing upon them an additional expense. Having their currency now predicated upon bonds which bear a very small interest, and the present establishment being a success in point of currency, it was deemed best not to disturb the existing status on that subject further than to provide as is done in this section-

That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting the right of any national bank to issue one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5, as now provided by law.

In the next place, it was considered whether it would not be . better to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury be required to purchase more silver bullion, and to issue that in small notes. As might be supposed, Mr. President, that might bring up a discussion of the silver question again, and it was thought best—at least by a majority of the committee it was the prevailing sense—that the existing status of the law on silver should not be disturbed.

I do not suppose that there are many people in this country who have studied the subject of finance who believe that some increase of the silver currency as represented by certificates, and by certificates in small denominations, would at all disturb the parity of all our coins, which is a subject of primary consideration; but there are a great many persons who are sensitive, and, as it seems, supersensitive, about the word "silver." I am not one of them, and even those who are sensitive, when they exercise their own ratiocination, soon have their qualms allayed.

They remind me very much of a person of whom I heard on one occasion who was asked the question, "Do you believe in ghosts?" He was a little superstitious and answered. "Oh, no; I do not believe in ghosts, but I am afraid of them." [Laughter.] So while nobody of the rigid and extreme gold school of finance is afraid there is going to be any silver revolution or any pressure of any alarming scheme respecting silver in this country, they are a little afraid of it, or they are afraid that somebody else is afraid of it, and their fears that somebody else may be afraid of it seem to prevail in their views on that topic.

Now, passing by these three branches of our currency, there was the greenback currency. That rests upon nothing but its receivability for taxes, its receivability for debt, and the promise of the United States. Intrinsically it has no more value than the paper match with which one lights his cigar. It is in the air, by itself, if you separate from it the faculties which law has imparted to it and the promise of the United States.

It seemed best to me, in the situation in which we are placed, to give this authority for that greenback currency to be broken up into smaller parcels. It can not possibly weaken it, though it needs no strengthening, and it is the most convenient method of handling that topic in my humble judgment. Therefore, on this question I concurred with the committee, and I can see no substantial or tenable ground of opposition.

I will state, however, I would have preferred that we might have extended the use of silver, of which this country is so great a producer, and about which I have never felt the alarm which has so pervaded the minds of other gentlemen.

Like the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] on yesterday, who claimed the right to be heard for a few moments because he had not spoken on that day, I wish here to state a fact respecting the controversy on the subject of silver which to all persons is not known. I have never believed for a moment that this country ought ever to tolerate currencies of a different character which were not maintained by the Government of the United States at par with each other. It would be an infinite misfortune to the masses of the people to have a currency made of one substance which was of a certain value and another currency made of another substance which was of a different value. In the Democratic national convention of 1896, in which I had the honor to be an advocate of the free coinage of silver, it was concurred in by the gentlemen who were framing the declaration of the party on that subject that the United States ought to guarantee, and would guarantee through Democratic agencies if it had the opportunity to exercise them, the absolute parity of all its coins at all times and anywhere.

It was believed that but for the discrimination which this Government made against silver, and with the powerful impetus it would give to its increased valuation by such laws as we had when the two currencies were established, it would soon restore itself; but if it did not, and in view of the possibility that it might not, the leading men of the Democratic party, with every expectation and confidence, give, I might say, assurance that they would be sustained, were in favor of that proposition, and the platform was framed to contain that idea, which was so unhappily expressed that although not grammatically capable of but one construction it soon fell in the hands of the interpreters and was interpreted away.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say while I am on my feet a few words about section 9 of this act. I approve the residue of the bill, but I deem it to be appropriate to call attention to one clause of section 9, as to which I notified the committee that I would maintain my freedom to make any suggestion on the subject that might seem appropriate. It is provided in the bill that not more than $9,000,000 of national bank currency shall be withdrawn within a month. On page 7, in section 9, this idea is expressed in these words:

Provided, That not more than $9,000,000 of lawful money shall be deposited during any calendar month for this purpose: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to withdrawal of circulating notes in consequence thereof.

That refers to the sum of money that may be deposited for redemption and retirement. Under the law as it now exists but $3,000,000 of such money can be retired. It is claimed that at the time that law was passed $3,000,000 per month bore the same relation to the aggregate of our currency that $9,000,000 bears now, and for that reason it was asked and urged that we might safely allow as much as $9,000,000 per month to be withdrawn.

Another reason assigned was that in the summer time, between the seasons when the greatest business of the country is conducted, there is a time when money accumulates in banks; and if there is not some retirement of it it would create an influx of money into the banks of the great cities, that it would tend to stimulate speculation, and that when in the autumn crops had to be moved a stringency would be brought about by the reason of the speculative tendencies created in the summer.

the reason of the speculative tendencies created in the summer.

As a suggestion to be considered at the same time there is this reflection in my own mind: The banks themselves are not altogether disinclined to a little speculation if a favorable opportunity arises to suggest it. In the summer, when money is accumulating in them, they may find it more profitable to redeem their bonds and sell them again, and attempt to do that.

I do not claim to be an expert financier; I do not claim to be familiar with the courses of trade in the great cities, or with the accidents and incidents and tendencies of stock and other markets, but I do know this fundamental principle which has been impressed upon our minds in nearly all the courses of our financial development, and especially amidst its perturbations, that whenever you withdraw considerable amounts of currency from the mass of the circulation of a country you tend instantly to diminish prices.

I know, furthermore, that whenever there is a tendency to the diminution of prices there is a tendency of alarm and a tendency in the mind of the prudent financier to reef his sails. The bulls and the bears of the stock exchange play upon the feelings of the people, who can not be as familiar with what is going on behind the scenes as they are, and if we authorize them to control in any large degree the contraction of the currency of the country, and if they may combine together to do that and to advertise that, and to play upon that, they have a certain very great power with reference to the prices of commodities in the land.

A very valuable addendum has been put to this section by the committee, one that leaves it less open to criticism than possibly it might otherwise be. It is required that this withdrawal shall be subject to the approval of two persons. The first is the Secretary of the Treasury and the second is the Comptroller of the Currency. So the tendency to contraction and the ability of the bank to contract is checked and guarded by both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency.

I wish that there were here other members of the Finance Committee, who represent the same general view that I do. I wish also that I had better information concerning such a topic as is brought to reflection by a provision of this sort. I have only attempted to state the case as it is, rather hoping that we would not enlarge the sum of money that might be contracted in a market.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I understood either from the Senator from Virginia or the Senator from Rhode Island that there is also a provision in the bill which provides for the deposit of money received from customs duties, while the present law only authorizes the deposit of internal-revenue taxes. Is that correct?

Mr. DANIEL. That is correct. Mr. BERRY. Why is that?

Mr. DANIEL. The chairman of the committee will explain it.
Mr. BERRY. I wish to state, before the chairman answers, that if I remember correctly this same proposition came before the Senate some five or six years ago, brought here by the Senator from Rhode Island. It had other features in it in regard to certain municipal and railroad and other kinds of bonds, I think.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator is not referring to the pending bill as containing such a provision?

Mr. BERRY. No; the bill of five or six years ago, which had the same provision in it in regard to customs duties. Objection was made to it and it died. It was never passed, and I think the killing of it was very generally approved by the country, so far as I could get information on the subject. That was the case at least in my section. I should like to know something about the object and purpose of that bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Arkansas was entitled to the credit of having killed it, because the bill was considered near the close of the session. I have no doubt that his action at that time had his approval, but I never discovered that anywhere else in the country the Senator's action was approved.

Mr. BERRY. I will say to the Senator that my action had the universal approval of the people down in the southern part of the country. I happen know, for the matter has been under recent discussion in some localities. The Senator is very much mistaken if he thinks it did not have the approval of anybody else, because I distinctly remember when I talked to Democratic members of the Finance Committee, one of whom was the Senator from Virginia, they came in and aided me very materially.

Mr. ALDRICH. The objection which was then made to the provision reported by the committee was that the committee undertook to change the law as to the character of the securities that were deposited and that it provided for the payment of interest upon the deposits. The bill as now reported by the committee simply provides that customs receipts may, in the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, be deposited in national depositories, the same as internal-revenue receipts are now deposited.

That principle has received the approval of committees of both Houses. It is the subject of several bills that have been presented in both Houses at this session, and, so far as I know, there is no objection to it on the part of thoughtful men in any section of the United States. I think it is a provision that has practically universal approval.

I can see no reason—and I think the Senator from Arkansas on consideration will not be able to discover a reason—why receipts from customs should be locked up in the Treasury of the United States, reducing the amount of the outstanding currency and congesting business in every section of the country with resulting ills.

This law was enacted in 1864, when it was necessary that customs recipts should be paid in gold and kept by the Government to maintain the credit of the Government and to pay the interest upon Government bonds then outstanding, and the interest on which, by their terms, was payable in gold. Conditions have entirely changed, and I know of no reason of any kind why the Secretary of the Treasury should be compelled to take the money which is paid into the United States Treasury and lock it up and prevent its legitimate use in the channels of trade.

If any banker should undertake to do this persistently, the Senator from Arkansas would insist that this locking up should be considered a misdemeanor or punished as a crime. The people who believe with him generally as to the amount of currency that should be in circulation have proclaimed their unalterable opposition to any action which contracts the amount of the currency in the country or restricts its circulation.

If the Senator from Arkansas had his way, I assume he would take the whole $150,000,000 in the Treasury, plus another $150,000,000 which is now in the national banks, and keep it all locked up in the United States Treasury forever. For what purpose? For the security of the Government funds? No. What earthly purpose can then be subserved by a practice which is contrary to that of every country in the world and which can serve no useful purpose here?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas had his way, he would reduce the amount of taxes so that this great surplus would not be collected year by year to be deposited either in the Treasury or in national banks. The Senator from Rhode Island says there is no good reason for keeping these funds in the Treasury or subtreasury. Can he tell me any good reason why the money belonging to this Government should be handed over to the national banks for them to loan it out at interest and put the interest into their own pockets? That is what he calls "circulating the money of the people"—that these banks shall take this money free of charge. In the other bill which the Senator reported he proposed to require interest to be paid on Government deposits. I believe there is no such proposition in this bill that is now proposed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I intend to offer such an amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I will see about the amendment when we get to it. The Senator from Rhode Island says that he is in favor of this bill because it will tend to expand the currency. Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon; I made no such statement

I surely understood the Senator to say that if it were deposited in the banks it would tend to contract the currency, to which he and all others are opposed.

ALDRICH. No: I said to lock it up in the Treasury would have the inevitable effect of contracting the currency, and I object to that.

That is what I thought the Senator said.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; the Senator made a statement which was the converse of that, that I was in favor of expanding the currency

Mr. BERRY. I said the Senator was very much opposed to contracting the currency, as I understood; or, you can put it the other way, and say that by loaning money out it would expand the currency that much. I presume that is the Senator's idea by putting it in the banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would not expand the currency, but it would return promptly the money to the channels of trade which is taken for taxes and for other purposes from the people of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. Then, you propose to give it to certain favored individuals to loan out to people free of charge in order that they may thereby make a profit on it. I repeat, Mr. President, I can not understand how it can be advocated that it is the duty of this Government to take money in its Treasury and give it to the banks free of charge, and let them loan it to citizens, and, of course, take the profits in the shape of the interest which is paid upon it.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am opposed to repealing any law which now prohibits the deposit of this money in the national banks. Under the present law, as I understand, all taxes received from internal revenue can be Customs duties can not. Our friend from Rhode Island claims that there is a wonderful degree of prosperity all over the country under the present system. I can not see any reason, Mr. President, why he should insist on changing it in this regard. I am opposed to the bill. I was opposed to it years ago, and am opposed to it still.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee who reported this bill what is the purpose of the second proviso, on page 2? As I understand, under existing law the fund for the redemption of greenbacks is $150,- 000,000. The first proviso reads:

Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin and bullion held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $100,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended.

Is it the object to reduce that redemption fund from $150,-000,000 to $100,000,000?

Section 6 of the existing law-the gold-Mr. ALDRICH. standard act of 1900—is reenacted by this provision precisely word for word, except at the end of the thirteenth line, on the first page, the word "twenty" is changed. The word "twenty" in the present law was changed in the House to "five" and amended by the Senate committee to "ten."

Mr. NELSON. What line is that? I have not got the last print.

Mr. ALDRICH. Line 13 of the first page. In every other respect this section reenacts in precise language the existing The proviso to which the Senator refers is in the existing law, in the act of 1900, precisely as it is here.

Mr. NELSON. But are all the following provisos?
Mr. ALDRICH. All the provisos—every one in that section is exactly the same as the provision of the existing law.

Mr. NELSON. The only change, then, is in line 13?

Mr. ALDRICH. The denomination of the notes, which now are $20, was changed by the House to "five" and by the Senate committee to "ten."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, for information, a question. The last paragraph of section 3 provides:

And every association so designated as receiver or depository of the public money shall take and receive at par all of the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, or for loans or stocks.

I do not understand what the words "for loans or stocks'

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the proposed section 3 is identical with section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, with the omission of the words "except customs receipts." The provision to which the Senator calls the attention of the Senate is the precise language of section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. Those words he refers to are now in the existing law and were put there, I think, some time during the late war.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wanted to know what was meant by "loans or stocks." I did not know that the Government loaned money on stocks. If there is no use for the language here, why not strike it out?

Mr. ALDRICH. They were paid into the Treasury for Government loans by the parties who secured the loans, and the word "stocks" as used here is equivalent to bonds. This word "stocks" is in all the earlier legislation and is used instead of bonds. It has been used in our financial legislation for more than a century. It means in this connection what it has meant in all the prior laws-simply bonds.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I just want to say a word with reference to sections 1 and 2 of this bill. I am not familiar with the matters contained in sections 3 and 4, about which Senators have been discussing; but as to sections 1 and 2, which contain provisions relating to the issuance of notes of small denominations, it is a matter of extreme importance and of very great interest to the people of the section from which There is a very great dearth of notes of small denominations there, and the business transactions of the country are very greatly embarrassed by the fact.

was very much more familiar with the details of this matter last spring than I now am, from the fact that I had communications sent to me by numerous bankers in the South, my State, and also by the Southern Bankers' Association, which met in Atlanta some time last spring, and which passed resolutions asking for this particular legislation. I conferred at the time with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] on the subject and showed him the papers which had been sent to me.

Heretofore the demand for money in smaller denominations has largely been met by the shipment of silver dollars throughout the South, by the Government shipping it and paying the express charges, which enabled the bankers to get that class of money without expense to them. But that arrangement has been changed, so that the Government no longer pays the express charges upon the silver, and so imposes a burden upon the banks which they are unwilling to bear. It was in consequence of that that they urged such a change in the law as would permit the issuance of smaller denominations of bills. the express charges upon silver being so great.

In consequence of the embarrassment and of what the officers of banks had written to me on the subject, I went to see the Secretary of the Treasury to see what possible relief could be given by the Treasury Department in exchanging smaller notes or notes of smaller denominations for notes of larger denomina-I was told by the Secretary that under the law and regulations it was impossible for the Department to send these smaller denominations of notes, except where banks had ac-cumulated ragged or unpassable money, if I may use such a term, and returned it to the Treasury Department, and they were authorized to send smaller denominations in exchange.

The national banks have, it is true, the liberty under the law of issuing small notes, of which they have not taken full advantage, but the reason they have not taken such advantage is that if they should do so the other money of five and ten dollar denominations, which they need, will be less in supply than their demand requires. Therefore, before they could do that it was necessary, or deemed necessary at least by them, that the Government should reduce the denomination of gold certificates, as is done in this bill, providing for the issuance of $10 notes, which they have not now the privilege of doing, and in that way supply bills of that denomination to an extent which would enable the national banks to go further and issue smaller denominations of equal amount in the aggregate. provision, which authorizes the issuance of smaller denominations of greenbacks, as I understand, is in furtherance of that cbject; and I think I am fully justified in saying that so far as the banks of the South are concerned it is of the utmost importance that the two provisions of this bill contained in sections 1 and 2 should be enacted into law. I am not sufficiently familiar w th the general subject to pass upon the question as to the matters contained in sections 3 and 4; but as to sections 1 and 2 I think it is of the utmost importance to every section of the coun ry that they be enacted into law.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I do not know that attent on has been called to the fact that when the exception of customs receipts was made with respect to the deposits in banks taley were payable in gold, and the original idea requiring that they should be paid in gold came about in the time when this country was issuing paper money and desired to have gold for its redemption and for extraordinary and emergent purposes, which do not repeat themselves in our time.

Section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, which is embodied in section 3 of this bill, simply omits the terms respecting the customs dues that were formerly embodied. To preserve them now apart, as heretofore, and as a particular or sacred fund for a certain purpose, would be an anachronism, and would perpetuate a provision in our statutes when the reason of it had

So I would say to my friend from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] that there is no reason for retaining them, unless it be the purpose to prevent the deposit of any currency in the banks. Like him, I would very much prefer to see our taxes reduced, but I do not see a very instant prospect of doing so.

Mr. HALE. It is rather the other way.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes. Having a condition to deal with, I like to deal with it in the spirit of that dispensation which remembers the shorn lamb and tempers the wind to it so far as it may. If we are going to take these large sums of money, taken from the public purse, all the outlets by which that purse could percolate them back into the social system are for the benefit of the whole people.

It is true that the banks are an intermediate agency; it is also true that if we did not have these intermediate agencies we would probably have no intermediate agencies. Some regard them as necessary evils. There is nothing in this world that I yet have been enabled to discover, unless it were the Democratic platform during a period of the session of a convention while it was in an enthusiastic mood, that had nothing but good in it. Most things have some good and some evil in them. There are evils in banks, probably due to the fact that they are run by people who have a good deal of human nature in them. Is it good policy to do anything to congest any portion of our currency anywhere? I think not; and this provision is against the tendency of the congestion of a portion of the currency.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the pending amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as a new section the following:

sert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That section 5153 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5153. All national banking associations, designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government: and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government. And every association so designated as receiver or depositary of the public money shall take and receive at par all of the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, or for loans or stocks."

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the entire section. After the substitute is read I propose to explain it for a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota presents an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all of the committee amendment and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

mittee amendment and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 5153. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to designate national banking associations as depositories of public money and when so designated the same shall, upon giving the security hereinafter prescribed, be qualified depositories of such money under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe; and such designated banking associations may be employed as the financial agents of the Government, and they shall perform such reasonable duties as depositories of public moneys and financial agents of the Government as may be required of them by the Secretary or by law, and all public money deposited with them shall at all times be subject to the draft and withdrawal of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require such designated association, before depositing any public money with it, to furnish and give reasonable and ample security for such money by the deposit in the Treasury of the United States of United States bonds, or in the discretion of the Secretary the bonds of any State or municipality of the Union, or such bonds as are accepted by the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts or New York, commercially at par, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with it and for the faithful performance of its duty as financial agent of the Government; and no public money shall be deposited as aforesaid in excess of the par value of the bonds given as security therefor. Every banking association, designated and qualified as receiver or depository of public money as aforesaid, shall at all times take and receive at par all national currency bills issued by any national banking association which have been paid to the Government for any purpose whatsoever. The Secretary of the Treasury shall not allow the public money in the Treasury permanently to accumulate over and above a safe and reasonable working balance required for the current demands upon the Government; practicable, be deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in the national banking associations designated and qualified as receivers and depositories of public money as aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate depositories and make deposits of public money in such manner throughout the several States of the Union that all parts of the country may have the benefit of such deposits, and not confine such deposits to a limited number of banks in the larger cities. All national banking associations, designated as depositories of public money, as aforesaid, and receiving such money on deposit, shall pay to the Government of the United States such interest upon the deposit as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, in any case, than at the rate of 2 per cent per annum upon the average daily balance of such deposit, and the Government of the United States shall have a first and preferred lien on the assets of the national banking association in which the public money of the Government is deposited for the amount of such deposits.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the amendment to section

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the amendment to section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, as reported by the Committee on Finance, relating to the making of national banks Government depositaries, contains only one change from existing law. Under the law as it exists up to this date customs receipts can not be deposited directly in national banks. This is the only change. Under the law as it stands to-day the Secretary of the Treasury may make deposits of Government money with the national banking associations, and the language of the law is:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise.

I understand—and if I am in error in this respect I desire to be corrected-that prior to the present Secretary of the Treasury it was not the custom under this law to receive any thing but Government bonds for these deposits. Am I correct?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is correct. Mr. NELSON. But the present Secretary of the Treasury has amplified the law and construed it so that he receives various kinds of securities. From a letter which I have here from one of the leading banks of St. Paul it appears that he is receiving railroad bonds and other securities.

Mr. ALDRICH. My impression is the Secretary has never received railroad bonds as a basis for security.

Mr. NELSON. I think this letter indicates it.

ALDRICH. I think the writer of the letter must be Mr. NELSON. I am going to have this letter read later.

The amendment I have offered does not change the existing law except in two or three particulars. First, it expressly authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to receive such securities, in addition to United States bonds, as he has been in the habit of receiving. In other words, my amendment, as it is offered, allows him, in his discretion, outsite of United States bonds, to take the bonds of any State or municipality that are commercially at par and any bonds that are accepted by the savings banks of Massachusetts and New York, and that, I understand, is the criterion on which the Secretary has acted.

In the next place, I provide that the Secretary shall endeavor to keep as much as possible of the Government money out on deposit among the banks, and only retain in the Treasury enough money for a reasonable and ample working balance. In other words, not to allow the money to accumulate in the Treasury by the hundreds of millions, but simply to retain sufficient for an ample working balance, the remainder to be deposited in the banks.

The next and the most important provision is that requiring the banks to pay interest on these deposits. During the last winter, as a matter of curiosity, I looked at the daily statements furnished us as to where the Government money is. I have here the statement of the 19th of February, showing that out of a total surplus in the Treasury of $247,000,000, $151,000,000 was on deposit in national banks, and during most of the win-ter, so far as my memory serves me—and I have been glancing at these statements from day to day—on an average there was from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000 of Government money in the hands of these national banks.

These banks make a great profit out of this money. I have noticed, and so have other Senators, I suppose, that every once in a while they get a financial flurry in New York. They get up a scheme of stock speculation and all at once money gets scarce. It is not because there has been a sudden accumulation in the Treasury. That does not seem to control the matter. But when they get into one of their financial stock-speculation schemes and get up a financial flurry they rush over here to Washington and appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, "For God's sake, help us out." Then he piles the money into those banks, and they loan it out on stock collateral to those speculators at interest all the way up to 2, 3, and 5 per cent a month, thus making big revenue.

I have heard one objection urged against the proposition to pay interest, and I propose to discuss it. It is that when you make the banks pay interest you change the character of the depositary; that, as it is, they are simply the fiscal agents of the Government; they are the depositaries. They stand there representing the United States. If that proposition is true, if they are the naked depositaries of that fund, what right have they to loan this money out to those stockjobbers and to charge interest? If that position is true, then the decision of the supreme court of Wisconsin some years ago would hold good.

Many years before, they had a law in the State of Wisconsin, as they now have, requiring deposits of the revenues of the State to be made in banks designated by a board, charging the banks interest. Several State treasurers were in the habit of depositing those moneys in various banks and getting interest, part of the interest being pocketed and part of it being distributed among the political parties. Afterwards suits were brought to recover that money, and State treasurers who in that manner had loaned out the public money without authority of law were, under the decision of the supreme court, compelled to disgorge the interest.

RECESS

Thereupon the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8182) authorizing the Twin City Power Company to build two dams across the Savannah River above the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 24118. An act granting to the Central Colorado Power Company a right of way over certain public lands, for irrigation and electric power plants, in the State of Colorado:

H. R. 25184. An act to relieve the Tanana Mines Railroad in Alaska from taxation; H. J. Res. 204. Joint resolution disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico: and H. J. Res. 246. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate to permit Jacob Ruppert, jr., as one of the House managers of the conference, to affix his name to the conference report on the bill (S. 4403) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 21684) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act regulating the retent on contracts with the District of Columbia," approved March 31, 1906, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 24118. An act granting to the Central Colorado Power Company a right of way over certain public lands for irrigation and electric power plants, in the State of Colorado, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

H. R. 25184. An act to relieve the Tanana Mines Railroad in Alaska from taxation; and

H. J. Res. 204. Joint resolution disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, and that the Senate take up the naval appropriation

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside for that purpose.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 24925) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the sub-head "Bureau of Navigation," on page 9, after line 9, to insert:

Naval training station, Port Royal, S. C.: Maintenance of naval training station, Port Royal, S. C., namely: Manual labor and material; general care, repairs, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and wharves: wagons, carts, implements, and tools, and repairs to same; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; stationery, books, periodicals, and other contingent expenses; necessary repairs to the buildings now erected to fit them for berthing, messing, and drilling purposes, and for galleys, latrines, and washhouses; for purposes of administration in connection with the training of apprentice, seamen; in all, naval training station, Port Royal, S. C., $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert "two copyists, at $900 each per year;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval War College, Rhode Island: For maintenance of the Naval War College on Coasters Harbor Island, and care of grounds for same, $12.300; one draftsman, at $1.200 per year; services of a lecturer on international law, $1,000; services of civilian lecturers rendered at the War College, $600; two copyists, at $900 each per year; purchase of books of reference, $400; one librarian, $1,400 per year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Naval War College, Rhode Island, from $16,900 to $18,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 14, line 5, to increase the appropriation toward the accumulation of a reserve supply of ammunition from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 2 on page 16, the last paragraph read being the following:

Navy-yard, Boston, Mass.: For one writer, at $1,000.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out "For one writer, at $1,000," and insert "For one clerk, at $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 16 on page 17.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the total in line 14, page 17. It should be increased by the addition of $200.

Mr. HALE. Let the total be increased by $200.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 17, line 13, after "thousand," insert two hundred;" so as to make the total read "$47,206.75."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Equipment," on page 19, line 15, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of coal and transportation from $3,750,000 to $4,000,000.

Mr. HALE. On page 19, at the end of line 16, I move to insert, after the word "million," "two hundred and fifty thousand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. After the word "million" insert "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars;" so as to read "$4,250,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 14 I notice that the appropriation is doubled, from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000, for ammunition, and just at this moment $250,000 have been added to the committee amendment, which increases the appropriation made by the House for coal and transportation $500,000. That makes the increase for ammunition and coal and transportation two million and a half. I dare say that there are abundant reasons for this increase.

Mr. HALE. Which item is the Senator calling attention to? Mr. CULBERSON. I am calling attention to two items. Mr. HALE. I see. What is the first one?

Mr. CULBERSON. For reserve ammunition, on page 14. The appropriation is doubled there, and for coal and transportation it is increased $500,000, making an increase of two and a half million dollars in those two items. I am sure that there is some good reason for it, but it does not appear.

Mr. HALE. Let us take one at a time. As to the appropriation, on page 14, for the reserve supply of ammunition, the Department estimated an addition of six million and some odd thousand dollars. It was found that the reserve of ammunition is very small. The committee, on full investigation, instead of giving $6,000,000 and more, made it $4,000,000.

Of course there should be some reserve supply of ammunition. It is all very carefully stored. Senators will realize that in time of complete peace the Navy is using a great deal of this appropriation in its summer cruises and its target exercises, and is all the time using up this appropriation. The committee thought a fair arrangement and compromise between what the Department asked and what the House put in the bill was

It is one of the things that Senators have got to realize-that we can not have this great Navy and make appropriations for big ships and build up a great establishment without involving very great expenditures incidentally. One of the things is ammunition. I can only say to the Senator, that looking at the matter as the committee tried to do, in a rather conservative way, instead of giving six million and odd thousand dollars we gave $4,000,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not know but that this extraordinary increase had something to do with the assembling of the fleet now and then for great reviews by the President, and that it probably also had something to do with the Jamestown Exposition, about which the Senator from Maine, a week or so ago, presented certain remonstrances of bishops.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that the Jamestown Exposition has very much to do with this increase. It has something to do with it undoubtedly. That exposition has entirely departed from its original purpose and intent. Undoubtedly there is to be a great military pageant, and not much else will be of any account in that celebration. I do not think, however, that much of this appropriation will be expended there.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 30, line 24, after the word "dollars," to strike out "coaling plant, $15,000;" on page 31, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert "pattern shop for steam engineering, to complete, $61,200; track for 40-ton crane, extension, $10,000, the limit of cost to be $46,800;" and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and eighty-eight thousand seven hundred" and insert "two hundred and forty-four thousand nine hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

thousand nine hundred; "so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: Railroad and rolling stock, $2,000; sewer system, extension, $2,000; quay walls, to extend, $20,000;
grading, to continue, $15,000; central power plant, to complete, $60,000; blasting in front of quay wall (to cost $110,000), $50,000;
naval prison laundry, $3,000; naval prison cooking and baking plant, $3,200; naval prison, furniture and fittings, $8,500; naval prison, administration building, to complete, $10,000; pattern shop for steam engineering, to complete, $61,200; track for 40-ton crane, extension, $10,000, the limit of cost to be $46,800; in all, $244,900.

The amendment was agreed to

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "railroad equipment, additional, $5,000; railroad system, extensions, $10,000; sewers and drains, $10,000; cement storehouse, $11,000;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and twenty-seven thousand eight hundred" and insert "two hundred and sixtythree thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause

Navy-yard, New York, N. Y.: Electric plant, extensions, $25,000; underground conduits, extension, $15,000; heating system, extensions, $20,000; electric motors for pump well valves, $7,000; electric elevators, $10,000; central power plant, to complete, $140,000; for sidewalk on Flushing avenue and Navy street in front of the navy-yard, $10,800; railroad equipment, additional, $5,000; railroad system, extensions, $10,000; sewers and drains, $10,000; cement storehouse, $11,000; in all, navy-yard, New York, N. Y., $263,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 5 on page 34.

Mr. HALE. On page 34, line 4, in the items for the navy-yard at Norfolk, Va., after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Central power plant, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

NELSON. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the necessity of having another amendment in line 5 after the amendment just adopted.

Mr. HALE. That is a matter of the total.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; to add $130,000.
Mr. HALE. That is right. It should be $365,000.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 34, line 5, strike out "$235,000" and insert "$365,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 34, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "sidewalks along outside station wall, $2,500;" and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-two thousand" and insert "forty-four thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read .

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Dredging and filling in, $25,000; grading and paving, $5,000; sidewalks along outside station wall, $2,500; water system, extensions, $2,000; removing steel tanks from Dry Tortugas, $10,000; in all, navy-yard, Key West, Fla., $44,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "central light and power plant at Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal., $100,000; removal of office building No. 103 from its present location to the hill in the rear of building No. 65, $1,000;" and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and forty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "two hundred and forty-eight thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.: Railroad system, extension, $5,000; electric-plant system, extension, $10,000; sewer system, extensions, $3,000: heating system, extension, $5,000; telephone system, extensions, $1,000: electric capstans for dry dock No. 1, $10,000; extension of building No. 119, block and cooper shop, $15,000; improvements to buildings Nos. 69 and 71, $20,000; improvements to coal cylinders, $7,500; workshop for electrical class, $3,000; channel moorings, Mare Island Strait, $9,000; enlarging and moving dispensary building, $6,000; improvements to naval prison, $50,000; central light and power plant at Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal., $100,000; removal of office building No. 103 from its present location to the hill in the rear of building No. 55, $1,000; in all, navy-yard, Mare Island, $248,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert "and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to repair and reconstruct, where necessary, the buildings, wharves, and other public works recently damaged by hurricane at the navy-yard, Pensacola, $200,000;" and on page 36, line 4, before the word "forty-two," to insert "two hundred and;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.: Machinery for central power plant, $35,000; conduit system, $2,500; improvements to storehouse, building No. 25, $5,000; and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to repair and reconstruct, where necessary, the buildings, wharves, and other public works recently damaged by hurricane at the navy-yard, Pensacola, $200,000; in all, navy-yard, Pensacola, $242,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for public works, navy-yards, and stations from $2,599,240 to $2,994,940.

The amendment was agreed to. The reading was continued to line 22 on page 43.

Mr. PILES. I desire to call the attention of the Senator

Mr. FILES. I desire to can the attention of the Senator from Maine to an amendment, by striking out the word "repair," in line 20, and inserting the word "construction."

Mr. HALE. That is right, Mr. President,
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. In line 20, strike out the word "repair" and insert the word "construction;" so as to read:

Naval hospital, Puget Sound, Washington: For the construction of naval hospital buildings, $75,000 (total cost not to exceed $150,000).

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for the increase of the Navy from $22,713,-915 to $25,713,915.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine one or two questions. Can the Senator tell me how much the bill appropriates for enlarging the powder plant at Indian Head? I have not been able to find that clause in running through the bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator refers to the establishment at Indian Head?

Mr. STONE. I understood that there was an appropriation to enlarge the plant and to increase its capacity. I understood also that there was an additional appropriation for the new plant provided for by the $165,000 which was appropriated at the last session on the naval bill.

Mr. HALE. The only appropriation here in the bill, M
President, for the proving grounds at Indian Head is $34,130.

Mr. STONE. Thirty-four thousand one hundred and thirty dollars?

Mr. HALE.

Mr. STONE. Can the Senator from Maine tell me how much, if anything, is added to the $165,000 appropriated last year?
Mr. HALE. Just this amount of $34,130.
Mr. STONE. That is for Indian Head?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. But last year the Senator will remember there was $165,000 appropriated for a new powder plant. Has that amount been increased by this bill?

Mr. HALE. No; the only provision for the proving grounds at Indian Head is the item of $34,130.

Mr. STONE. Is that the entire increase for powder manufacturing

Mr. HALE. That is the appropriation for proving grounds.
Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to say something upon the subject of powder manufacturing, but the occasion is hardly opportune for it. I am not going to detain the Senate with a useless discussion. I do want to say just a word or two, however.

I asked for information from the clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs this afternoon as to the amount of powder purchased and consumed by the Navy and by the Army annually. I made like inquiries of the departmental officials. The information I have is that during the last year 2,025,000 pounds were purchased for the Navy and 1,034,624 pounds were manufac-tured at Indian Head and Newport for the Navy. The same year the War Department consumed 1,334,495 pounds of cannon powder, and, in addition, contracted for 342,500 pounds of smallarms powder. This makes a total of about 1,700,000 pounds for the Army, or about 5,000,000 pounds, all told, for the military

Mr. President, it is in proof in the hearings had before the Committee on Naval Affairs that the Government can manufacture this powder for from one-half to one-third less than it costs to buy it. There is an enormous expenditure, amounting to many millions of dollars, for this munition. It is costing the Government about 75 cents a pound. It can be made for little, if any, more than half that amount.

I had intended to say something upon the general subject, but I shall not do it now. However, Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the Record without reading, for the information of the Senate and use hereafter, some letters that have been sent to me by powder manufacturers in Kansas City, Mo., Peoria, Ill., and York, Pa.; and so I leave the matter for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted to insert the letters referred to.

The letters referred to are as follows:

EXCELSIOR POWDER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, 616-618 GUMBEL BUILDING, Kansas City, Mo., January 12, 1907.

Hon. WM. J. Stone, United States Senator, State of Missouri, Washington, D. C.

United States Senator, State of Missouri, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: No doubt your attention has been called to the operations of the "Du Pont powder trust" with the United States Government and their methods of strangling the competition of independent manufacturers of black powder and dynamite throughout the country, all of which is absolutely true.

The writer has been employed by the black-powder interests of this country for the past twenty-six years, during which time he served the Laflin & Rand Powder Company, Hazard Powder Company, and Phoenix Powder Manufacturing Company, all of which have been swallowed up by this "octopus."

In the fall of 1903 myself and others severed our relations with the "Dupont powder interest" and organized the Excelsion Powder Manufacturing Company, an independent company, for the purpose of manufacturing black powder and other explosives, etc. We came to Kansas City, and after looking over the shipping facilities, etc., reached the conclusion that this was the most logical point in the West to locate our mills.

City, and after looking over the shipping facilities, etc., reached the conclusion that this was the most logical point in the West to locate our mills.

We finally found a desirable location at Holmes Park, Jackson County, Mo., just south of this city, or as close as we could locate a plant of this kind to a large growing city.

We have there to-day one of the largest and most modern equipped mills in the West, representing an investment of several hundred thousand dollars. We have been in operation one and one-half years and find that we made no mistake as to location or the amount of business done from this city.

The construction work was scarcely well under way on this plant when the agent of the Du Pont Company at this city notified the trade of a new schedule of prices on powder and dynamite.

To give you an illustration of their methods will say that prior to commencing the erection of our plant the price on blasting powder in carload lots at Kansas City was $1.45 per keg, and on less than carload lots, $1.60. As soon as the construction of our plant was well under way, they reduced the price to $1.20 per keg on carload lots and $1.35 on less than carload lots at Kansas City, then when we finished construction and got our plant in operation a further reduction was made, a price of from 90 cents to $1 per keg on carload lots and $1.10 to $1.25 per keg on less than carload lots being named to the trade, and these reductions were being made on a constant advancing market on goods which enter into the manufacture of powder, all of which was done for the purpose of ruining us right from the start, they being desirous of keeping us from getting a foothold. Even in the face of this unfair competition we succeeded in securing some of the largest toal and coke companies and others whom we know favored us out of sympathy for the honest fight we were making against the "powder trust" in this field where it had dominated so long.

About the time that we were negotiating for this business the Du Pont's present representative at Pittsburg, Kans., made the statement down there that it was foolish and preposterous for our company to come in and expect to get any of the trade in that field which they had enjoyed for the past eighteen years.

He said they had two mills in that field, one at Columbus and the other at Pittsburg, Kans., from which they could afford to sell blasting powder below cost in order to keep out competition, because they made a sufficient profit on their Government smokeless powder end of the business to permit them to do this for years, and then when we and other independent companies quit that the buyers would have to come back to them.

This will give you a fair idea of what we have to contend with in business out here, which, no doubt, applies elsewhere.

Suffice it to say that a number of your constituents in Kansas City, Mr. Bernard Corrigan, Mr. William Kenefick, Mr. Samuel N. Lee, and a number of others in St. Louis, are interested in the welfare of this company, therefore we will thank you in advance, as well as your colleagues in the honorable body of which you are a member, to give the question of appropriating a sufficient sum for the erection of three Government smokeless powder plants, as has been suggested to the Senate and Congress of the United States, your most heartly support. We will thank you to keep us posted from time to time as this matter progresses.

Yours, respectfully.

Senator WM. J. Stone,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: * * * The business methods of this Du Pont trust are more despicable than anyone that has received public censure; it maintains a system of spies at the mills of all competitors, several of whom have been more than suspicioned of injuring property and of causing explosions with loss of life and property; it hires the railroad agents to furnish it lists of the shipments from independent mills and with a system of mischief makers precedes arrival of these shipments with threats that if such purchases are not stopped this "trust" will refuse to sell such buyers other lines of goods not handled by independent manufacturers; it hires employees at independent mills to betray their principals; it pays hundreds of coal miners in Illinois, Iowa, and Indiana large sums of money on condition that they will refuse to use powder made at independent mills and compel the coal operators to buy "trust" brands, so that scores of operators who are stockholders in independent powder companies can not use their powder in their own mines by reason of these grafting and unlawful practices of the Du Pont trust.

This Du Pont monopoly maintains a department for the dissemination of false and malicious reports, injuring the credit and quality of the goods of competitors, and uses constantly the most disreputable and unlawful means to restrain and destroy the business of others and create a more exclusive monopoly for itself.

It sells mining powder in the territory reached by competitors at less than cost and uses the enormous profits derived from its Government graft to supply the funds to enable it to destroy its competitors. It is only a question of time when there can be no competition if these conditions prevail.

BUCKEYE POWDER COMPANY, Peoria, Ill., February 11, 1907.

Senator WM. J. STONE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor 9th instant, per Mr. Hollister, secretary, is received.

The domestic prices made by the powder trust on black powder are as follows:

Rifle powder, kegs, 25 pounds_______Rifle powder, half kegs_______Rifle powder, quarter kegs______ $4.50 2.50 1.50

Rifle powder, half kegs 1.50
Rifle powder, quarter kegs 1.50
Rifle powder, quarter kegs 1.50
For export they allow a discount of 10 per cent from the above prices and 1 per cent brokerage at New York.

Blasting powder, the domestic and export prices from New York is the same, $1.25 per keg; no discount.

New York City, as well as all other export markets, is noncompetitive—that is, the independent companies can not afford to maintain agencies in those cities because of the expense of handling powder in the harbors. The independent companies do not manufacture rifle powder, as the "trust" has a complete monopoly of this grade.

The ammunition trust, composed of Winchester Cartridge Company, Peters Cartridge Company, Western Cartridge Company, and Austin Cartridge Company, refused to load any powder excepting the brands made by the powder trust, and as nearly all the rifle and sporting powders used in the country are loaded into shells by these ammunition companies, independent manufacturers are shut out of the trade. This is under an agreement between the ammunition trust and the powder trust.

There is so little of the blasting powder exported that it does not pay the independent manufacturers to compete in export markets. The trust therefore sells blasting powder in noncompetitive markets at $1.25 per keg, and in competitive fields, where independent mills are located—say, in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania—the trust cuts the price of blasting powder to 90 cents per keg to destroy competitors. It relies on its profits of two and one-half millions on Government smokeless, secured to it by patents and its exclusive monopoly, to furnish the funds that enable it to sell blasting powder in competitive fields against independent manufacturers at a loss.

The protective tariff on rifle powder is 4 cents per pound, or $1 per keg of 25 pounds. The same on blasting powder. With a protective tariff of $1 per keg on blasting powder that, the trust sells in Illinois and Missouri at 90 c and sold it in competition with the powder trust at 90 cents? He would not only donate the powder, but would have to give away 30 cents per keg in cash for the privilege of doing so.

There is, however, better protection for the powder trust than the tariff. An international agreement entered into between the powder trust of this country and the powder and dynamite trusts of Europe divides the markets of the world and excludes all foreign powder and dynamite from the United States. Under this agreement foreign companies forfeit a fine of $1.50 per keg for all powder of their brand sold in this country, and the Americans pay the same fine on any of their powder sold abroad. The trade of the United States, Central America, and the Isthmus is ceded to the Du Pont monopoly; the trade of South America is pooled; Canada is reserved for the Hamilton Powder Company, of Canada, which can not sell or deliver in the United States. The prices are fixed for the entire world by the "international combination." It is for this reason that the explosives used on the Panama Canal are all furnished by the Du Pont monopoly at its own prices.

The graft of this great monopoly on the United States Government is worth at least $5,000,000 per year on its dynamite, smokeless powder, and other articles supplied the Government.

If an investigation of this powder trust were ordered by the Senate and independent manufacturers were used as witnesses, it would surprise the country to know the extent and richness of the powder graft. Very little of it has been covered in our complaints to Congress, because we have only touched upon the smokeless ordnance powder for the Army and Navy.

You can form little conception of the extent to which the Du Pont trust bleeds the National Government.

Truly, yours,

R. S. WADDELL.

ROCKDALE POWDER COMPANY, GENERAL OFFICE, York, Pa., February 12, 1907.

Hon. WILLIAM STONE, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: Your attention has no doubt been directed to a matter relating to the manufacture of ordnance smokeless powder that should receive the support of every United States Senator during the present session of Congress.

I presume the matter to which I refer, namely, to have the Government of the United States own and control its own ordnance smokeless-powder plants, has been placed before you in an intelligible manner, as Mr. R. S. Waddell, Peoria, Ill., I believe, forwarded printed matter to every Senator and Representative in Washington.

I will therefore not take up your time now, but will be as brief as possible.

Twill therefore not take up your time now, but will be as brief as possible.

The Du Pont monopoly not only controls the ordnance smokeless-powder situation, but are violators of the Sherman Act, and should be dissolved.

dissolved.

This case has been in the hands of the Attorney-General for a sufficient length of time to enable him to take some decisive action, and I hope that you will, on behalf of the American people whom you represent (which includes the "independent" powder and dynamite manufacturers of this country), prevent this monopoly from exacting from the taxpayers the exorbitant sums of money which they do, on account of securing the ordnance smokeless-powder contracts from the Government, as well as to prevent the annihilation of the "independents," using, as they do, these profits to forever exterminate every mother's on of us.

On every article of an explosive received.

using, as they do, these profits to forever exterminate every mother's son of us.

On every article of an explosive nature where there is any competition they have almost made it prohibitive for the "independents" to remain in business: but where they are not molested their profits range from 100 to 125 per cent, and are able to pay dividends on watered stock to the extent of at least $45,000,000.

Mr. V. N. Roadstrum, of the Department of Justice, who has been appointed a special on this particular case, will, upon request, give you some information regarding the methods of this gigantic octopus and of their "dare-devil" way of organization that will convince you that what I have dictated in this letter is about as near the unvarnished truth as you can get it.

I also desire to refer you to Hon. D. F. Laffan, who represents this district—and a mighty good Representative he is, too—as regards myself and what I represent.

As a citizen of the United States and an "independent" powder and dynamic manufacturer I respectfully ask you to give the matters herein referred to your earnest consideration and at the proper time your support, thus relieving this country from the jeopardizing position which they would be placed in at any time if war were declared, as well as to prevent men who have tried, with all honor and sincerity, to build up a business for the support of themselves and their families from being ruined "without a struggle," using the profits from Government contracts, as this monopoly does, to carry out its plans.

Yours, very truly,

W. I. Koller, Secretary.

Peoria, Ill., February 4, 1907.

Senator William J. Stone,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Herewith I hand you copy of letter I have to-day written Hon. Walter I. Smith, chairman of the subcommittee of Appropriations Committee of the House, which fully explains itself.

The vice-president of the Du Pont trust tried to evade the force of my charges. There was just enough truth in his statements to evade a general denial from us. He avoided a specific denial of our charges.

Truly, yours,

R. S. Waddell.

R. S. WADDELL.

FEBRUARY 4, 1907.

Hon. Walter I. Smith,
Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I note by the press that Mr. J. A. Haskell, vice-president of the Du Pont Company, at a hearing before your committee stated that Du Pont Company does not manufacture under the Bernadou-Converse patents; that he stated:
"The Du Pont, Laflin & Rand and California companies made smokeless for the Government under formulas not covered by these patents, to which manufacture no objection was made." That—"When the International Smokeless Powder Company was purchased by the Du Pont Company, in 1903—4, these patents became the property of the Du Ponts and that all the companies in the 'trust' have continued to furnish powder to the Government, but the patents were not used in the manufacture."

He further said that—
"As the patents were matters of public record, the formula could not be kept secret."

As to all this I wish to make reply.

It is true the three companies made powder for the Government under the Munroe patent, which the Government owned. This was because the International did not have sufficient capacity to supply the Government more than 6,000 pounds Gaily. The powder the Du Pont and other companies made was not as good as that produced by International. If it had been so, it was wholly unnecessary for the Du Pont trust to purchase the International and take over these patents at a valuation of more than $9,000,000, because the International did not manufacture any kind of powder except ordnance smokeless.

ternational did not manufacture any kind of powder except ordnance smokeless.

A young man has been with me nearly a year. His brother is the foreman of the Du Pont Smokeless Works ever since it was built in 1893. The man who is with me has worked in the experimental laboratory and understands the chemistry of the smokeless powder. He assisted in building the Du Pont plant and worked in every department up to last May. I have samples of all the powders made at the Du Pont, Laflin & Rand, and International works. We know accurately about all the powder they have made. I also have the specifications of the Navy Department for the smokeless ordnance powder, which you can easily obtain by calling on the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy Department. These specifications determine the kind of powder made at International, Du Pont, Laflin & Rand, and California. They refute the statements of Mr. Haskel.

The Navy Department always gave the preference to the International Company, because the Munroe patents covered a nitro-benzine colloid which is not as good as the alcohol-ether colloid.

It is true that the Du Pont trust, which owned the California and Laflin & Rand, has such a graft with the Navy Department—and the latter had the power to turn down the International if it desired—that the Du Pont companies did manufacture this alcohol-ether colloid, covered by the Bernadou-Converse patents, without any right to do so, and the International was compelled to submit or be squeezed out. That was one of the means for forcing the sale of International to the "trust."

Mr. Haskel did not deny that since the purchase of International the "trust."

Mr. Haskel did not deny that since the purchase of International to the "trust."

Mr. Haskel did not deny that since the purchase of International the Du Pont trust has an absolute and exclusive monopoly, besides a very strong graft with the Navy Department, which precludes all possible competition by other private manufacturers. This confirms all that I have stated.

Regarding the publication of patents:

They do not disclose the details of manufacture; and if they did, it would be of no value to other manufacturers, at home or abroad, in supplying this Government. The terms of the patents are very general. They govern in France, Germany, and Italy, as well as the United States. Mr. Haskel did not reply to the point I made that this identical powder used in United States Navy guns was taken to France, Germany, and Italy, fired in foreign guns, where the pressures, velocities, and all details were taken by the chronograph, and by which foreign admiralties were able to make comparison by actual test of American powder in their guns as against their own powder.

Nor did Mr. Haskel deny that the Du Ponts were now building a plant for the manufacture of this American powder, covered by patents which should be the property of the United States Government, for the Brazilian nation.

This not only gives away the formula, but furnishes the goods, developed at the expense of the American people, to a foreign government to enrich this Du Pont monopoly.

Truly, yours,

R. S. WADDELL.

Truly, your R. S. WADDELL.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 33, after the word "Washington," in line 5, it is proposed to insert:

For addition to brass, iron, and steel foundry, $100,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HALE. I make a point of order that the amendment proposes an additional appropriation which is not estimated for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CARMACK. What is the point of order, Mr. President? The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the amendment proposed an appropriation which is not estimated for.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be further temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be further temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that the bill may be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee may first receive consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, after line 3, to insert:

Improving Sasanoa River, Maine: Completing improvement in accordance with project submitted in the report of the Board of Engineers to the Senate Committee on Commerce, dated February 7, 1907, $44,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 23, to insert: Constructing breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Bar Harbor, Me.: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

Improving harbor at Sullivan Falls, Me.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 21, to insert:

Improving harbor at Newburyport, Mass.: Continuing improvement,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to insert:

Improving harbor at Hingham, Mass., by redredging the channel, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to insert:

Improving Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass.: For surveys, preparation of plans and preliminary work in connection with securing easements and releases as recommended by the Board of Engineers in report submitted in House Document No. 323, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for improving Point Judith harbor of refuge, Rhode Island, on page 7, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-six" and insert "one hundred and forty-five;" and in line 14, after the word "same," to insert "and also what further improvements, if any, should be made therein;" so as to make the proviso read :

Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said easterly or shore arm of said breakwater, to be paid for from time to time as appropriations may be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $145,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, and the Secretary of War may cause an examination to be made with a view to determining whether a breakwater on the westerly side of said harbor of refuge is necessary to prevent sand movements, or for the protection of the sheltered area within the same, and also what further improvements, if any, should be made therein. same, a

Mr. FRYE. There is a mistake in that amendment, in lines and 8. The amount should be $170,000 instead of $145,000. I move that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 19, after the word "dredging," to insert "or otherwise;" so as to make the clause

Improving the entrance to Point Judith Pond, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $8,000, which amount shall be expended for dredging or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to insert:

Improving Sakonnet Harbor, Rhode Island: Completing improvement by removal of rock No. 1, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 99, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

Improving Providence River and harbor, by deepening the area from the main ship channel to the harbor line, between Wilkesbarre Pier and Kettle Point, to a depth of 25 feet, mean low water, in accordance with the greater project reported in House of Representatives Document No. 108, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, $117,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 22, to strike

Improving Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels in the harbor of New York: The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to prosecute the improvement in said channels, with a view to obtaining, first, a depth of 35 feet, and subsequently increasing said depth to the full depth allowed in the adopted project, as the available depth in the entrance channel to said harbor shall require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 23, to insert: Improving Hudson River, New York, by extending the 12-foot project from below the Troy dam through this dam and to the barge canal entrance at Waterford in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 539, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $924,100, exclusive of the sums herein or heretofore authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the words "Schodack Creek," to insert "and $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in extending the 12-foot channel eastward to the bulkhead line and the modified bulkhead line in the city of Troy, as proposed by Col. J. W. Barlow in 1901;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $250,000, of which $5,000 may be expended in removing the bar and deepening the channel at the mouth of Schodack Creek, and $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in extending the 12-foot channel eastward to the bulkhead line and the modified bulkhead line in the city of Troy, as proposed by Col. J. W. Barlow in 1901.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 6, to insert:

Improving channel north of Shooters Island, between New York and New Jersey, being an extension of an existing project for the improvement of Arthur Kill or Staten Island Sound from Kill van Kull to Raritan Bay in accordance with the report and recommendation submitted in House Document No. 337, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $180,115, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 20, to insert:

Improving Maurice River, New Jersey, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 664, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, $161,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to:
The next amendment was, on page 26, line 18, after the word "branches," to insert "and the western branch channel;" and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and eighty-two" and insert "three hundred and fifty-two;" so as to read:

Improving Norfolk Harbor, Virginia, and its approaches, from deep water in Hampton Roads to the junction of the eastern and southern branches, and the western branch channel, in accordance with House Documents Nos. 373 and 381, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, including the removal of shoals at the mouth of the eastern branch, $352,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute such project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $850,000, exclusive of the amounts herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 5, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement and the maintenance of James River, Virginia, from $175,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, before the word "session," to strike out "second" and insert "first;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Blackwater River, Virginia: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 177, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, and for maintenance, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 18, to insert:

Improving Big Sandy River and Levisa and Tug forks, West Virginia and Kentucky: Continuing improvement by the construction of Dam No. 1, Levisa Fork, and Dam No. 1, Tug Fork, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of said dams, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $135,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, there is a private dredge in that neighborhood, but the authorities have recommended this I am of the opinion that the work in Mobile Harbor has been extravagantly paid for. This appropriation is well recommended by the Department, whatever a private individual or officer may say outside of the papers. For a long while there have been constant complaints of the manner in which the work has been done there. It has been done by one contractor for some years, and it seems to be so arranged that nobody else can get to do the work. If they had a dredge there, it would be a large saving to the Government, as I am informed.

I understand that the report does not recommend this improvement, but when the report is understood by the Senate I think the Senate will agree with me that the recommendation is not consistent with the report.

I do not understand that an engineer who makes a report of the facts has any right to control the legislation of Congress in determining whether a feasible project, if he has determined it to be feasible and reported it to be feasible, shall be adopted.

I suppose that I can better put before the Senate this report by reading it, and it is short, than by making an effort to explain it to the Senate. I can do it more briefly. It is a brief one and will explain itself.

In March, 1905, there was provision made for surveying and examining this work to determine whether or not it was feasible, and this is the report that was made by the district engi-

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF TOMBIGBEE RIVER FROM DEMOPOLIS, ALA., TO COLUMBUS, MISS.

ENGINEER OFFICE, UNITED STATES ARMY, Mobile, Ala., December 9, 1905.

I ask the attention of the Senate to this report, to see whether my statement that the recommendation of the engineer is inconsistent with the reported facts is correct or not. His recommendation is that there is not commerce there sufficient to make it worthy of improvement. As this report will show, there is commerce there of something like $140,000,000, or $150,000,000, or $160,000,000, if the river is so improved that it can be made navigable the year around.

$160,000,000, if the river is so improved that it can be made navigable the year around.

General: In compliance with directions contained in Department letter dated March 23, 1905, I have the honor to submit the following report upon a preliminary examination of the "Tombigbee River, from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., with a view to securing a continuous channel 4 feet deep."

Previous examinations and surveys.—The first survey of this section of river was made in 1871, and report thereon is published in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the same year, page 573, The project provided for removing obstructions and building wing dams, and was adopted in 1872. It was modified in 1879 so as to provide for a low-water channel of navigable width and 3 feet deep by removing obstructions, building wing dams, and closing island chutes. This project was not completed.

Preliminary report upon a survey of Warrior River below Tuscalosa, the Tombigbee River from its mouth up to Vienna, and from Vienna up to Walkers Bridge is published in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1888, Fart 2, page 1227. Report of a survey and estimate for 6-foot navigation on Warrior River, Alabama, from Tuscalosa to Demopolis; Tombigbee River from its mouth to Vienna, and Tombigbee River between Vienna and Cotton Gin is published in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1890, Part 2, page 1719. The improvement was recommended and the project was adopted by the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890, and provided for securing the proposed 6-foot channel by snagging, tree cutting, bank revetment, bar improvement, and the building of dams with pneumatic gates at an estimated cost of $779,400 for this section. In 1897 the estimate was changed so as to provide $2,000,000 for the construction of ten locks and dams between Demopolis, Ala., and Columbus, Miss. A blueprint of the map made from the survey upon which the 6-foot project was based, showing the Tombigbee River from Columbus to the Warrior River,

This examination was commenced on October 30, 1905, at Columbus, Miss., working downstream. Soundings were taken about every 75 or 100 feet, and the minimum depths on the shoals recorded. They are given below, reduced approximately to mean low water.

The soundings are given here, which I shall ask to have put

Mr. McLAURIN. After giving the soundings, the report continues:

A few borings made indicate that the bed of the river over almost the whole distance covered by the examination is composed of blue rock or rotten limestone. In nearly all places the surface was found to be of sand and gravel. Probably, however, the limestone or blue rock is underneath throughout. The nature of this rock is such that when exposed to the air it hardens, but when submerged it is soft, so that in places it is easy to excavate. At nearly all points along the river there are high steep bluffs, the concave bank being lime rock and the convex bank flat and soft. Tenmile shoals (so called from their length) is about the only place where there is no bluff. Here the river meanders between low alluvial banks of light sandy soil and unstable material, which yields readily to the eroding action of the river. The banks of this soil are from 8 to 12 feet above low water, and in most places are overgrown with willows and underbrush. In the limited time available it was not possible to obtain any reliable data as to current observations, but it is apparent that the discharge of the Tombigbee River is much greater than that of the Black Warrior River and that there will be an abundance of water for canalization.

Now, mark, large sums of money have been expended in the Now, mark, large sums of money have been expended in the improvement of Warrior River from Demopolis up to Tuscaloosa, when this report shows that larger volumes of water are discharged by the Tombigbee River than are discharged by the Warrior River.

Previous improvement.—Work on this section of Tombigbee River has heretofore been confined to the removal of logs, snags, and other obstructions from the channel and overhanging trees from the banks, building and repairing jetties, and excavating rock, gravel, sand, and clay. Work of this nature is needed every year to remove obstructions brought into the stream during freshets, as these freshets reach a height of between 40 and 60 feet above low water. The work done has resulted in affording a channel navigable for the light-draft boats plying this section, on a 2-foot rise above mean low water, for a period of four or five months per annum.

Geographical location.—Columbus, the upper limit of the improvement, is the county seat of Lowndes County, Miss., and is located in the eastern part of the State, near the Alabama line. It is a town of about 11,000 inhabitants, is surrounded by a rich, fertile, and productive country, and is one of the most enterprising towns in this section of the State. From Columbus the river takes a southeasterly trend to Demopolis, in the western part of Alabama, a distance of 156 miles, and in this distance it has a fall of about 108 feet. The country through which the stream passes is very productive, and for farming purposes will compare favorably with any other in the States of Alabama and Mississippi. Plantations line both banks of almost this entire section, though there are reaches where either one or the other bank, and in some instances both banks, are heavily timbered. The width of the river is tolerably uniform, and on an average it is from 300 to 400 feet wide at low water, increasing in width considerably during a freshet.

Resources and commerce.—The principal farm products of the country are cotton and corn, the yield being from one-half to one bale of cotton—

I ask attention especially to this:

Cotton is the chief crop, about one-fifteenth of the total yield of the United States being grown here.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator does not believe that?

Mr. FRIE. The Senator does not believe that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir; with pleasure. I do not believe that one-fifteenth of the cotton crop of the United States is grown there.

Nor 1 per cent, does the Senator believe?

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes, sir; I will say more than 1 per cent. As I said to the committee when I was before it, I do not believe that one-fifteenth of the cotton crop of the United States is grown there, but, say, one-thirtieth or one-half as much as has been said by this report is grown there, it would be worth $20,000,000. Say that one-sixtieth of it is grown there and then it would be worth $10,000,000. I think it may be safely said that one-fiftieth of the cotton crop of the United States is grown there, and it would be worth from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Now, this is the report of the engineer. I am reading that part of it to show that the report of the engineer is inconsistent with the recommendation he makes. The cotton crop of the United States may be well and reasonably estimated at $600,000,000 a year. That is a very conservative value to put upon the cotton crop of the United States. So one-fifteenth of it would be worth $40,000,000. Then he says just after that:

The cotton-seed oil, oil cake, meal, and hulls will about equal the value of the cotton lint itself.

If that were so, then the cotton lint and the products of cotton seed raised in that section of the country would be worth $80,000,-000; and it would be safe to say that the other freight that would be transported over that section of the river if it were improved would be equal to the value of the cotton and the cotton seed. So if this estimate were correct, according to the report of this engineer, the cotton lint, cotton-seed product, and the other trade that should be transported over this section of the river would amount to about $160,000,000 a year.

As I said very frankly to the committee I say now to the Senate, in response to the suggestion from the chairman of the committee, I do not believe, in fact, I know, that one-fifteenth of the cotton produced in the United States is not produced there. do not want to misrepresent this matter to the Senate. That is the report of the engineer who made the recommendation that the commerce of that section is not worthy of the improvement, and I am repeating this to show the inconsistency between his report and his recommendation.

Much of the country along the river and adjacent thereto is heavily timbered with pine, oak, cypress, sweet gum, and sycamore. The making of staves is at present in active operation, and with additional transportation facilities this would most likely become a staple industry.

Before I leave that subject, lest I may be misunderstood, I want to say that I have no criticism to make of the engineer. I am satisfied he reported what he thought to be true. made an estimate of this commerce, of the cotton produced in that section of the country and the value of it, the value of the cotton-seed products, just as he understood it, and I have no complaint to make of the district engineer who made this report, nor have I any complaint to make of his report.

The lime-rock producing area is considerable, but it will probably never be made an article of extensive trade without cheap river transportation. Another rock found in the formation of the river bank, called "Tombigbee rock," yields a Portland cement which has stood the analytical test. With the river open the year round there is no reason to doubt that cement factories would multiply in this region.

No commercial statistics could be obtained at the time of examination, though efforts were made in that direction. Statistics for the calendar year ending December 31, 1904, showed that cotton, cotton seed, logs, breadstuffs, fertilizers, farm supplies, provisions, and general merchandise to the amount of 20,000 tons and the value of $600,000 were handled during that year.

Improvement considerations.—The only tributaries of any importance between Columbus and the junction of the Tombigbee and Warrior rivers, just above Demopolis, are the Sipsey and Noxubee rivers, both of them small streams. A study of the section under consideration makes it clearly evident that the only method of making much improvement is by canalization. This will require the construction of ten locks and dams, at an estimated cost of $2,500,000. The banks being generally a rock bluff on one side and fairly stable on the other, they are unusually favorable for this class of structure. At or near each lock site there would be an abundance of stone, gravel, and sand for the masonry and for riprap work.

I especially call the attention of the Senate to this statement.

*Conclusions.**—No further survey is considered necessary, the records this office being sufficient for the purpose of preparing a preliminary stimute of cost.

estimate of cost.

Now, I want to summarize. Here is a report which shows that in that section of the country, not what I think about it, but what the engineer thinks about it and says about it when he is making his report to General Mackenzie. Here is a report which shows that the commerce from Columbus to Demopolis on that section of the river, if the river were improved sufficiently to admit of transportation the year around, would amount to $160,000,000 at a low estimate, a conservative estimate; and yet with that statement of that amount of commerce, he concludes with this statement—it will be observed by the Senate that he does not make a recommendation that it shall not be done, but he negatively says:

I do not recommend the upper Tombigbee River as being worthy of further improvement by the General Government by the building of locks and dams, because, apparently, the amount of business would not justify expending the amount of money.

Respectfully submitted.

W. E. CRAIGHILL, Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. A. Mackenzie. Chief of Engineers, U. S. A. (Through the Division Engineer.)

Now, this report being true, the facts that are put before Congress being true—that there is in that section of the river commerce to the value of $160,000,000—can it be said that it is not worthy of improvement because it has not the commerce to support it? For this reason I say that the report of facts and the recommendation, or rather the failure of recommendation, of the engineer are inconsistent.

I desire without reading it to put in the RECORD a statement by citizens of Columbus. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

A STATEMENT BY CITIZENS OF COLUMBUS.

The report of the United States engineer makes cost of necessary locks and dams to be $2,500,000. Interest on this at 2 per cent would be $50,000, and add the same for annual care and working the locks, the total yearly charge would be $100,000.

The estimate of I. H. Sykes, secretary of the Columbus Progressive Union, of tonnage for the season of 1904-5 is 140,000 tons. If one half of this is cotton and cotton products to, say, 70,000 tons, we have the equivalent of 280,000 bales of cotton. The saving in freight on cotton by river against rail is $1 to $1.25 a bale, so that on this item there is a saving of $280,000. The other 70,000 tons is miscellaneous freight, all carrying a higher rate than cotton; but allowing the same rate the saving there is $280,000, or a total saving on the whole 140,000 tons of $560,000—more than 20 per cent of the cost of the improvements.

ments. Columbus alone handles an average of 45,000 bales of cotton, on which there would be a saving of $45,000; and on its other freights there would be more than an equal amount, to, say altogether, $90,000 a year. This estimate is made on a six months' uncertain river.

Indeed, the tonnage carried on the river any year only represents that which the people have been unable to hand to the railroads. The river is seldom navigable before the middle of December. The rains that make it so make the roads unnavigable. The crops are ready and begin to move in September, so that the river farmer hauls his crop to market before December while the roads are good. That taken by boat is the surplus that could not be hauled, and varies violently according to the seasons.

surplits that could not be hauled, and varies violently according to the seasons.

The figures of I. H. Sykes of 1904—5 are disputed by Mr. Kennerly, an "inspector" of the United States engineer's office at Mobile, but Major Jervey, his superior officer, concedes that the tonnage may have been 52,000 tons. At a saving of $4 a ton on this extremely low tonnage, the saving was $208,000, an excess of $108,000 over interest and maintenance, sufficient to warrant the investment.

This tonnage was derived in five months' operation, uncertain river, and a lot of boats running from the middle of December to the middle of May.

Neither Major Jervey nor Mr. Sykes takes any account of the lumber and stave business done by gasoline boats, barges, and rafting, a business that constitutes a very large part of the export trade of Mobile. Were the river navigable the whole year it would reduce freights at an equivalent of $1 a bale on cotton, and in the same ratio or all commerce in the Tombigbee Valley, whose annual total is valued at $80,000,000. How? If the farmer living on or in wagon reach of the river can ship his cotton to Mobile at $1 a bale, it would all go to the river, as 50 cents a bale will move cotton 20 miles. The railroads would at once meet the competition and reduce their rates accordingly, so that the farmer on the other side of the railroad for, say, 20 to 30 miles, would get the benefit of the river competition. The same results would accrue on the east. Thus the commerce of the whole Tombigbee Valley, worth $80,000,000, is affected by this improvement.

One railroad that partakes of this commerce made for the year ending June 30, 1905, after paying all expenses, including rentals and interest on its bonds, net, over 16 per cent on its capital stock. Its earnings up to January 31, 1906, indicated, net, for the year ending June 30, 1906, over 26 per cent. These figures are taken from a banker's statement, handling the securities of the railroad company. So that a reduction in rates brought about by river competition would not bankrupt the railroads tapping the Tombigbee River. Indeed, the freight rates are practically the same now when the cotton crop is 13,000,000 bales as they were when the crop was 5,000,000 bales.

Laws have been made to protect everything North, East and West;

Laws have been made to protect everything North, East and West; vast sums appropriated to dig out their harbors and canalize their rivers, while so little has been done for this section. We are an agricultural people and pay tribute under all their legislation. We have always felt the heavy hand of the Government. Are we never to feel its benign, helping influence? We have seen millions lavished in distant seas on a people of no kith or kin to America. The faith of our Government pledged to guarantee the bonds for railroad construction in the Philippine Islands, so remote, so unimportant, in the world's civilization that the average school boy can not locate them on the map. The cotton of the South helped more to put up and hold up the gold standard for the country; no affirmations of political platforms or statutes of Congress brought the gold to our shores. It was the exporting of three-fifths of our cotton that brought in the last six years over eighteen hundred million dollars in gold. We are consumers of the products of American mills and American labor and pay in European gold.

gold.

The Government has listed the Tombigbee as its own, a navigable stream. We can not bridge it without an act of Congress. The Government will not improve it, nor will it give a lease to an aggregation of local capital to improve it, nor may we harness its thousands of wasting horsepower to help the struggling people on its banks. If this be a sample of "government ownership," a thousand times better were it for the people that all public utilities be within private or corporate control.

it for the people that all public utilities be within private or corporate control.

For twenty-five years have our people appealed to Congress to improve this river; have traveled its long reaches to get together in conventions; have spent time, money, and energy in this behalf, and now, when the Government's own engineer has given in the most conservative language an estimate of the resources of the country it would serve, showing that it produces one-fifteenth of the cotton crop of the United States, affording commerce of the value of $80,000,000, with enormous possibilities, we are again remitted to the waiting list. We have been smitten in Mobile, the house of our friends, riven by the hand of an engineer's clerk, charged with "furnishing information which was not correct," because, forsoorh, we are "interested parties." Being thus tipped off in sweeping generalities by his clerk, Major Jervey falls into the error of creating the impression that the steamer Vienna was wrecked about a year ago from the date on which he was writing and therefore not in the trade, as noted by Mr. Sykes, and that the Mary and City of Camden were wrecked in September, 1906, whereas, in fact. the Vienna was not wrecked until the middle of February, 1906, and Sykes's report, which he is trying to discredit, is for the season commencing December, 1904, and ending June, 1905. These dates seem to have been overlooked by the whole bunch of Mobile knockers. Sykes makes report of the tonnage for the season commencing in December, 1904, and ending about June 1, 1905. The engineers come along and try to discredit it because some of the boats carrying the tonnage were wrecked the year following. One is tempted to say there are "interested parties" opposed to the improvement, who have been so careless of dates as to state facts which, in the language of Inspector Kennerly, "is not correct." It is due Major Jervey to say he was a new and making a report on data furnished him by others.

SOME MOBILE STATISTICS AS TO COTTON.

Year.	Mobile re- ceipts.	Total crop, United States.	Probable Mobile receipts.
1857-58 1858-59 1904-5	Bales. 522, 364 704, 406 330, 000	Bales. 3, 257, 339 4, 018, 914 13, 565, 000	Over one-sixth, Do. About one-twenty- fourth,
1905-6	250,000	11, 315, 000	About one-twenty- second.

During the period 1857, 1858, and 1859 practically all of Mobile's cotton arrived by river and went out by sea.

The engineer says "that one-fifteenth of the cotton crop now is raised in the Tombigbee Valley." With a river every day of the three hundred and sixty-five the rate on cotton within 250 miles of Mobile, north and northeast, which embraces the Tombigbee River, would be $1.25 per bale less than now. So that it would save the people approximately $1,000,000, and the "port receipts" of Mobile, instead of being, as now, from 250,000 bales to 350,000 bales, would be nearer 1,000,000 bales. Mobile is the natural port of this section of the country, and with the river the railroads would find it hard to make a rate to any other port in competition with Mobile, on account of the distance and service performed, and therefore could not divert the cotton from this port. Then Mobile would come into "her own."

Taking the figures of one of her commercial bodies, the exports of Mobile in 1894, when her harbor had a depth of 17 feet, was only $3.476,000, but in 1906, with a depth of 22 feet, the value was $26,575,000, practically all of which was cotton, its products, and lumber, coming out of the Tombigbee and Alabama River valleys. Three-fifths of the South's cotton is exported. Why should not that of the Tombigbee Valley go again via Mobile, as it did prior to 1860? Rates to Mobile on cotton by river have most always been $1 per bale. The result has been that when the boats were put out of the running the cotton has been diverted from Mobile and gone to other ports. In this way the Tombigbee River has been made to run upstream, while the railroads carried commerce from Mobile until the value of her exports was reduced in 1894 to $3,476,000, the equivalent of about 70,000 bales of cotton. If the river had been kept in the running by improvements so that lines of steamboats could have been established to run the year round, Mobile would to-day be handling the commerce not only of the Tombigbee Valley, but largely that of the Alabama Valley, and her exports might be one hundred millions, and she in grateful sympathy with the struggling thousands back of her in the interior.

The increase in population and enormous increase in products have overtaken and overcropped all the railroads of the United States, and congestion prevails everywhere. The cotton crop a few years back was only 5.000,000 bales, whereas to-day it is 13,000,000. In a greater ratio has the country otherwise multiplied its products. The railroads can not do the business, and the sentiment is universal that Congress should improve the waterways of our country rather than check the prosperity which is dependent upon transportation.

What Captain Craighill, United States engineer, wrote of the Tombigbee Valley in 1903 was true then; its development is more important to-day. Here is his letter:

Engineer Office, United States Army,

ENGINEER OFFICE, UNITED STATES ARMY, Mobile, Ala., October 29, 1903.

Mr. JOHN P. MAYO, Columbus, Miss.

Mr. John P. Mayo, Columbus, Miss.

Dear Sir: I have just received your letter of the 27th. I am sorry you did not arrange to make the trip down the river with us. We had fine weather and were pleasantly entertained along the route.

I found the river larger than I expected, and its physical conditions appear very favorable for improvement by locks and dams. The valley of the river is immensely fertile and productive, and is urgently in need of better transportation facilities. It would seem that the saving in freight rates on the average annual amount of cotton that would be influenced by river transportation would pay a reasonable interest on the investment required for the improvement, although this feature of the case is one that requires, for a definite determination, more time than I have been able to give to it.

Yours, truly.

W. E. Craighille,

But all this quibble over figures and surplusage of statistics aside. The question is not whether the tonnage of the river is satisfactory now in its present half year—uncertain navigation—but whether the people of the Tombigbee Valley are to have an outlet, not so much for its cotton at reduced rates, but for its undeveloped resources of lime, lumber, and cement, which it now holds locked up in exhaustible quantities—commodities which the world needs—but which can not be marketed for lack of cheap and certain transportation.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I think that this amendment ought to go on the bill. I dislike to run counter to the report of the committee. I dislike to run counter to the recommendations of the engineer, if the recommendation of the engineer is to prevail with Congress. I do not, with all due respect to the engineers, believe that they have anything to do with making recommendations. They can only state, and it is only their duty to state to Congress the cost of the work to be done, the feasibility of the work, the condition of the work, and then leave it to Congress, untrammeled by any recommendations or suggestions from the engineers, to determine whether Congress shall make the improvement or not.

I apologize to the Senate for taking up so much time.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I have another amendment that I am going to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an additional amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. On page 44, line 5, insert the following:

Improving Tombigbee River, from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., by the construction of locks and dams and otherwise, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate $500,000.

Mr. FRYE. I thought that amendment was just voted down.

Mr. McLAURIN. It is a different amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 44, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

Improving Tombigbee River, from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., by the construction of locks and dams and otherwise, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate $300,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 44, after line 5, it is proposed to Improving Tombigbee River, from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., by the construction of locks and dams and otherwise, $290,000: Proxided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made, not to exceed in the aggregate $250,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I have but one more amendment. I give the Senate one more opportunity. This is the last amendment I will offer to this bill, and I hope the Senate will allow the amendment to be adopted, because it only asks for $200,000, a very modest sum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 44, after line 5, it is proposed to Improving Tombigbee River, from Demopolis, Ala., to Columbus, Miss., by the construction of locks and dams and otherwise, $200,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to propose and about which I have spoken to the chairman of the committee. On page 124, under the heading "Surveys," after line 4, I move to amend the bill by inserting:

Columbia River, from Bridgeport to Kettle Falls.

Mr. FRYE. That provides only for a survey, does it?

Mr. PILES. For a survey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 124, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Columbia River, from Bridgeport to Kettle Falls.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, for the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry]. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 59, line 10, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Of which amount $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, if required in the interest of commerce and navigation, be used to prevent a cut-off in said river between Choctaw Railway bridge and the town of Devall Bluff, Ark.

Mr. FRYE. That does not increase the appropriation at all, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer the amendment which I send to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 66, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Improving harbor at Algoma (Ahnapee), Wis., by the construction of an outer harbor with a depth of 18 feet of water, $40,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete such project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed, in the aggregate, $100,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TWELFTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LODGE. A resolution identical with that was reported this morning from the Committee on Foreign Relations. is no objection to it that I know of on the part of anyone. ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Sanate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and

Mr. LODGE. I move that the joint resolution (S. R. 93) authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington, reported by me this morning from the Committee on Foreign Relations and now on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. Lodge, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate are hereby authorized and directed to permit JACOB RUPPERT, Jr., as one of the House managers, to affix his name to the report of the members of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 4403, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, February 20, 1907.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONGRESS OF HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution No. 246, authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, to be held at Berlin in 1906, to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington, D. C., A. D. 1909.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Denby] to the print of the bill which says, "to be held at Berlin in 1906." Should it not read which says, "to be held at Berlin i "1907," inasmuch as 1906 is past?

Mr. DENBY, Mr. Speaker, that congress was held at Berlin, and a tentative invitation was then extended, which now awaits the affirmative order of this Government for final action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he amend by striking out the words "to be" in line 6.

Mr. DENBY. I ask that the bill be amended by striking out the words "to be" in line 6.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Denby, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

COLLISION OFF BLOCK ISLAND, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from further consideration of the House resolution No. 841, and that the resolution come up for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Granger] asks that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be discharged from further consideration of the following resolution, and that the same be considered at this time. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is, requested to report to this House, as soon as the investigation now ordered into the causes of the recent collision off Block Island, Rhode Island, resulting in the sinking of the steamship Larchmont and great loss of life is completed, the evidence taken in such investigation and the findings thereon and what action, if any, has been taken by such Department, or any board therein, or any bureau thereof, to provide measures to prevent, as far as possible, the occurrence of such disasters in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman if we will be able to get this report of the hearings in before Congress adjourns?

Mr. GRANGER. The investigation has been proceeding for the last seven or eight days, and I should think that there is every reason to suppose it would be completed before the 4th day of March.

Mr. MANN. It might be desirable to publish the result of the investigation soon after Congress adjourns, if not before, and before the meeting of the next Congress

Mr. GRANGER. I will be very glad to have that done. Will the gentleman suggest an amendment to the resolution?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this resolution came to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries after what we supposed to be the final meeting of the committee, and it was so plain a duty of the House that it seemed to me it was not necessary to call a meeting of the committee. I believe the committee would have been unanimously in favor of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Granger, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.
